Tucker's Face Shows Sign of Terrible Strain

Sketches by Artist Michelson, from descriptions of those who have seen the prisoner recently, show that his eyes are getting sunken and deep lines are showing in his face as he sits in his cell brooding over his situation.

TUCKER TO DIE?

Statement, Purporting to Be Semi-Official, Declares Governor Has Decided Not to Commute the Condemned Boy's Sentence.

The Boston Herald to-day prints a report, obviously intended to be regarded as semi-official, in which it is broadly intimated that Governor Curts Guild, Jr., has made up his mind to refuse to commute the sentence of Charles Louis Tucker, who is condemned to die for the murder of Mabel Page next week.

"For obvious reasons," says the Herald in the course of the article, "little more than this can oe said at this time."

The Herald recently demanded that Governor Guild sign the "sliding scale" gas bill, and he did it the same day the article was printed. The Herald, therefore, is looked upon as being in close touch with the executive chamber.

To-day's apparently inspired report says in part:

TO BE A REMARKABLE PAPER.

"There is good reason to believe that the Governor's decision will be a remarkable document. Not only, it is said, will it discuss the evidence offered at the hearing and give reasons in detail for the decision reached, but will be in the nature of a review of the entire case, commenting in strong and severe language upon certain of its phases, apart from the crime itself, which seems to His Excellency to be a blot upon the escutcheon of the Commonwealth.

"For obvious reasons little more than this can be said at this time. It is to secret that the Governor maintains great astonishment and no little indignation when asked by counsel to listen to a sensational attack upon the constitutional authorities of the State, which was offered as evidence at the hearing. He was even more indignant and astounded when it was revealed that the document containing these attacks was not a signed statement, and was written in an idle moment in the exercise of a literary skill which is generally admitted to be of a very high order.

PUBLIC TO GET HARRIS LETTER.

"This, it is said, will be one of the points upon which the Governor will touch in the message accompanying his decision. He has the entire paper from which Mr. Valey read, for it was put in evidence at the suggestion of Mr. Parker when counsel for Tucker refused to read it all.

"It is not improbable that this entire document may be given to the public by the Governor at the time he issues his decision, so that all may judge of the character of the attack offered by the introduction of such evidence—evidence which, it is claimed by the author, was never meant for publication at all, but a fictitious writing done for no other purpose than the exercise of a literary conceit.

"GLOOMY FOR TUCKER."

"The Governor only stopped long enough at the State House in the early morning yesterday to get his mail, and then with Secretary Gethens he silently stole away for a day off. He said he was going to some place outside of the State House where he would not be interrupted in the task of going over the Tucker evidence and determining what his finding should be. Before he left he gave out the statement that he would probably not render his decision before to-morrow.

"There was a meeting of the Executive Council yesterday, at which Lieutenant Governor Draper presided. As all nominations were held back by the Governor on account of the Tucker case, nothing was done but routine business. The Councillors, however, discussed the general aspect of the Tucker situation, and almost without exception declared that the outlook was not promising for the prisoner."

A GOOD NIGHT'S SLEEP.

After the best night's sleep he has had since he was put in the "death cell" of Charlestown prison, Tucker declared early to-day that he was satisfied Governor Guild would refer his case to the Executive Council and that he would be granted a reprieve.

This statement coming from the condemned man after a visit to him by his mother and his counsel, James H. Vahey, indicates that they have a strong hope that His Excellency will act favorably in the matter.

This is Tucker's statement, made while eating a hearty breakfast, to Deputy Warden Allen:

"I believe that the Governor will refer my case to the Council and that I will get a reprieve. I have had the best night's sleep and nothing has come up with my mother and with James H. Vahey.

"I am feeling fine to-day. I had the best night's sleep last night I have had since I was brought here. Of course, I appreciate the seriousness of my position, but I feel confident that the Governor will not decide against me."

For Other details of Tucker case, see Page 3.

Guild's Decision Not Yet Ready

GOVERNOR GUILD is not ready to render his decision on the case of Charles L. Tucker to-day. It was announced at the State House that his judgment would in all probability be made to-morrow.

Maine Liners in Collision Near Monhegan

BOATS CRASH IN FOG

City of Rockland and City of Bangor Are Slightly Damaged in Accident.

ROCKLAND, Me., June 7.—In a dense fog off Monhegan, the steamships City of Rockland and City of Bangor of the Eastern Steamship Company collided early today.

Both steamers were damaged. It is claimed by officials of the company that neither suffered injury enough to need assistance.

No one was hurt, it is reported, although there was considerable excitement aboard both vessels.

The City of Rockland made for this port, while the City of Bangor, which appeared to be the most seriously damaged, proceeded to Portland, convoyed by the steamer Calvin Austin from St. John, which arrived on the scene a few minutes after the collision.

Come Together Head On.

Appearances of the City of Bangor seemed to indicate that the collision was head on. The Bangor's bow was stove in. She struck the Rockland near the after gangway on the port side. A good sized hole was made in the Rockland's side above the water line.

Both boats had fairly good sized passenger lists.

They were proceeding slowly in the fog. It is claimed, with the usual signals going. The Rockland, which left Boston last night, was on her way to this port and Bangor, while the Bangor was Boston bound from the latter port.

Immediately after the collision the Bangor backed away. She appeared for a few moments to have been seriously damaged. The Rockland's captain, finding that the injury to his boat was not serious, stood by to render assistance.

Women Badly Scared.

The officials of both boats went among the passengers, who had been roused from their slumbers by the shock of the crash, and assured them that there was no danger. In the fog and darkness some of the women became badly frightened, but quieted down after the reassuring statements of the captains and their officers.

While the boats were waiting to determine the extent of the damage the Calvin Austin hove to sight. The Rockland's commander decided that he could proceed without assistance, while the captain of the Bangor decided to have his ship examined in Portland. Within little more than an hour the steamers were proceeding on their way under reduced speed.

The Rockland limped into this port a few

"SENT BY GOD," TUCKER CRANK AT STATE HOUSE

A man giving his name as George Lincoln Dobson of Lowell and carrying a big Bible of the "family" type under his arm, strode into the reception room of Governor Guild's office while the Governor was in his own private office at 10 o'clock to-day and insisted on seeing the Governor, to command him, "in the name of God," to save Charles L. Tucker from the electric chair.

He finally landed in the hands of the State police, who are now looking up Dobson's record in Lowell. Much excitement was created in the executive corridor at the time and stories were afloat that the Governor had been threatened.

Executive Clerk Edward P. Hamlin and Attendant William J. Reed were in the reception room when Dobson entered, saying: "I want to see the Governor. I am here to save Tucker."

"All right," said Reed promptly, "I'll take you to the Governor."

Reed escorted him outside and took him to Sergeant-at-Arms David F. Remington, who took him down the elevator to the first street floor and told him to wait a minute. While Dobson waited Remington hustled for State Officer Drake. While Drake was coming Dobson said to a reporter:

"I have been sent here by God on a special mission to save the life of Tucker. Do you notice the gloom hanging over the city? It is a warning to the Governor not to take the life of Tucker. I have a message from God to the Governor that he will execute an innocent man if he sends Tucker to the chair."

Dobson added that he was a paper hanger by trade, lived at No. 85 Pleasant street, and preached an evangelical sermon on the streets of Lowell in the rain last night.

Just then State Officer Drake came up and persuaded Dobson to go to the State Police office, though the Lowell man had begun to suspect by this time that he was not going to the Governor's office after all.

The State police took Dobson down into one of the cells in the sub-basement of the State House and locked him in. He immediately dropped on his knees by the bedside and began to pray. Later he talked again with a reporter, saying:

"I was working in Lowell this morning, hanging paper. I had got two strips up on the wall when God's message came. I dropped everything, went home and took up my Bible and hurried to Boston through God's tears. This rain is God's tears, you know."

TO TRY LETTER CARRIER AGAIN

After six hours' deliberation the jury in the case of John P. Sampson, formerly a letter carrier at the Fenway postal station, who was charged with [illegible] stolen letters containing money [illegible] was unable to arrive at a verdict. The jury reported its disagreement to Judge Lowell in the United States Circuit Court to-day, and was discharged.

The jury is reported to have stood eight to four in favor of acquittal. The case will go to trial again.

ONCE YALE ATHLETE; TRIES TO END LIFE

HARRISBURG, June 7.—Charles B. McConkey, a lawyer and a member of one of Harrisburg's leading families, attempted to take his life by shooting himself in the head with a revolver. His condition is critical. McConkey is a graduate of Yale and played two seasons on the Yale baseball team. He is thirty-five years old.

STOCK EXCHANGE HEAD BEFORE BRIBE PROBERS

President John Parkinson of the Boston Stock Exchange was a witness before the bribery investigating committee at the State House to-day. He went before the committee as soon as it convened at 11:15 o'clock, and came out of the room just fifteen minutes later.

"Were you able to give the committee any information regarding bribery?" he was asked.

"Not a thing," he said.

"Will you say anything about your examination?

"Not a thing," and Mr. Parkinson went away. He is the senior member of the brokerage firm of Parkinson & Burr.

While the stock exchange president was testifying former Alderman Patrick Boreen was waiting in the anteroom to be called as a witness. Mr. Boreen is a close political friend of Representative Frank J. Gethro.

It is said at the State House that Representative Gethro intends to demand from the committee that he be given an opportunity to refute the testimony against him given by Representative Jacob H. Mock of Ward 22, and that the committee is likely to summon both Mr. Gethro and Mr. Mock before it again.

Mock has "nothing," according to his own statements to the newspapers, that he was approached by a member of the House who asked him to vote against the anti-bucket shop bill and told him that he had a list of fifty members pledged to vote with him. The price to be paid for votes, Mock says he was told, was $50 each.

Subsequently, in his encounter with Gethro in the House lobby, Mock admitted that he had named Gethro as the member who approached him. Gethro thereupon called him vile names and struck him.

Gethro says that Mock has said that he was approached on May 3, and that the anti-bucket shop bill was finally disposed of on May 7. He says he wants an opportunity to introduce the House Journal of the 5d to prove that Mock must be mistaken in his date. It is probable that Mock will be recalled to give him an opportunity to correct his statement, if he made it incorrectly.

Thomas W. Lawson was summoned to appear again before the committee to-day. He would not say, before going to the State House, whether or not he intended to give the committee the names of those bribers and bribed which he had intimated he has in his possession. In the former occasion of his testifying Mr. Lawson refused to give out the facts upon which he based his statements as to the number bribed and the amounts spent.

The committee has about given up hope of again attempting to secure evidence from George J. Raymond. The subpoena server cannot find him. They say he has left the State on a vacation.

Mr. Lawson appeared at the door of the committee room at 11:55 and the committee announced that it would hear him at once. He was not accompanied by either an attorney or stenographer and said that he should not insist upon having either present, any more than he did upon the former occasion of his giving evidence.

JOHNSTOWN MENACED BY ANOTHER FLOOD

Special to the Boston American.

PITTSBURG, June 7.—The weather bureau has received a telegram from Johnstown telling of a cloud-burst along the Conemaugh River.

The stream rose thirteen and one-half feet between 8 and 9 o'clock in Johnstown this morning.

The weather people have no information about the damage done, if any.

At Ingleside, seven miles west of Johnstown, the Conemaugh River rose with frightful rapidity to a great height, flooding the tracks of the Pennsylvania railroad. The crest of the flood carried enormous quantities of drift of every character, indicating that the property damage had been considerable.

At 11:30 o'clock the flood was rapidly subsiding. No information could be had from Ingleside as to the source or extent of the damage above that point.

"SAILOR DROPS DEAD IN DANCE HALL

As he was leading his partner to a seat after a waltz in a Revere Beach dancing pavilion last night, Philip Walling, a steward of the U. S. battleship Illinois, dropped dead from heart disease.

Walling and as his guests several young lady friends, and although he complained of not feeling in the best of spirits, he insisted on dancing each time.

FRENCH BAPTISTS ELECT.

WATERVILLE, Me., June 7.—The annual conference here of the French Baptist churches of New England has elected Rev. A. E. Ribourg of New Bedford, president; Rev. N. N. Aubin of Manchaug, vice-president; A. Faneau of Salem, treasurer; and H. J. Tetrault of Worcester, secretary.

BANGOR BOATS CRASH IN DENSE FOG OFF MONHEGAN; PASSENGERS SAFE

minutes before 10 o'clock. Her captain stated everything was all right aboard the boat.

There were 200 passengers on board the Rockland, which also carried a large amount of freight. Captain Reis said that many of the passengers came on deck in their night clothes, some considerably frightened, but that they returned to their staterooms when they found no damage was done.

The stateroom that was penetrated by the Bangor's bow was not occupied.

The Rockland proceeded to Bangor after discharging her passengers and cargo for this port.

"ALL SAFE" AND STEAMERS WERE BUT SLIGHTLY DAMAGED

The Eastern Steamship Company received dispatches from both Portland and Rockland to-day, saying that the damage was not serious. The cause of the collision was given as fog, which was very thick early to-day off Monhegan, where the boats collided. It was stated that the Bangor's bow was twisted, and that she struck the Rockland near the after gang way on the port side. The Bangor was expected in Boston some time to-day with the Calvin Austin.

The Rockland dispatch said that the steamer there was only slightly damaged, and that no one had been hurt.

GIRL AUTOIST PAYS $10 FINE

A pretty Radcliffe College girl, Miss Theodora Clough, daughter of M. P. Clough, president of the Essex Trust Company of Lynn, and a well-known society belle, was fined $10 in the Lynn Police Court to-day for exceeding the automobile speed limit. Lynn society people crowded the court room, but Miss Clough did not appear in court. Through her attorney, she entered a plea of guilty.

Seven other fines for reckless motor driving were also given, as follows: Leonard A. Andrus of No. 32 Dexter Hall, Harvard; William P. Callaher of 1 Bedford avenue, Boston, each fined $15; Jacob B. Moore of No. 31 Bedford street, Boston; Willis R. McIlelland of No. 30 Princeton street, East Boston; John M. Horrigle of No. 343 Tremont street, Boston; Eldridge R. Page of No. 152 Main street, Winchester, and Roy C. Veal of No. 23 Howard street, Lynn, were each fined $10.

STRIKES IN WALTHAM.

WALTHAM, June 7.—About 300 employes of the Waltham Bleachery and Dye Works are on strike for an increase of 15 per cent in the wage scale, and unless the demand is granted before 10 o'clock Saturday morning the carpenters, firemen, pickers and finishers will stop work. The employees of the city sewer department went on a strike yesterday for an increase in wages to $2 per day and eight hours.

The villages of Wyoming and Stacy were destroyed. Many persons were maimed and it is believed several were killed.

DOMINICAN REBELS CAPTURE TWO TOWNS

REVOLUTION INCREASING, AND AMERICANS ARE ACCUSED OF AIDING FOE OF REPUBLIC.

Special Cable to Boston American.

ST. THOMAS, June 7.—Authentic advices are that the Dominican revolution is increasing daily. The revolutionary forces now number 900 in the Monte Cristi district and 200 in the eastern. The latter have captured San Banalamore.

Great discontent prevails throughout the republic. Hatred against Americans is increasing, the Dominicans believing that Americans are aiding Caceres, who is despised by the entire population. Revolutionists have also captured Guayabin, executing General Merille, the assassin of Juan Melliez and Manuel Cepin.

MEAT BUSINESS CUT IN HALF, SAYS PACKER

BEEF BARON TELLS CONGRESS COMMITTEE AGITATION HAS BEEN DISASTROUS.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—Thomas E. Wilson of the Nelson Morris Company, representing the big Chicago packing houses, in his statement to-day to the House committee on agriculture, said that the business had already been cut in half by the publication of the Neill report.

Mr. Wilson to-day took up the Beveridge inspection amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill and voiced the packers' objections to some of its provisions. Most of these objections, he said, were of minor importance and technical. The "only serious objection" was the placing of the cost of the inspection on the shoulders of the packers. The expense should be put on the government, he said.

In Hole They Dug Themselves.

"How can you object to paying the fees?" Representative Henry of Connecticut inquired, "when government inspection is to recover your market for you? How can you expect the government to pull you out of the hole which you have dug for yourselves?"

The witness denied that the packers had dug this hole. He denied that the agitation resulted from any wrongs they had committed.

"How badly has this agitation hurt you?" Representative Watson asked.

"The results have been disastrous," he said. "The sales of fresh and manufactured products has been more than cut in two. Every country in Europe has taken up the agitation. It is hurting very materially. Other countries that produce in competition are taking advantage of it. They will get the benefit and withstand the losses.

Predicts Calamity.

"I hate to think what the ultimate results will be if we are cut out of the foreign trade. We will not be able to handle the stock that raisers and farmers send us, and I don't know how we are to avoid a terrible calamity in the Western country at least."

Wilson in his testimony yesterday criticised the Neill-Reynolds report with a contemptuous criticism and tinged his remarks with rebukes of the President's special investigators. He read the report, paragraph by paragraph, and commented on each item, absolutely contradicting the declarations of fact on which the President recommended drastic legislation to correct the conditions in the packing houses, which he says are "revolting and dangerous to health."

Chairman Wadsworth and Representative Lorimer voluntarily and promptly aided Wilson whenever he hesitated in answering questions. Representative Madden of Chicago listened to the argument and Representative Wharton stood well out in front of the spectators.

'PHONE TRUST PLAN TO HEAD OFF RIVALS

One of the Independent Companies Declared by Other to Be a "Stalking Horse."

Two independent telephone companies, one of which is declined by the other to be merely a "stalking horse" for the New England Telegraph and Telephone Company, have hearings at a special meeting of the Board of Aldermen this afternoon on their applications for telephone franchises in Boston.

One of the new companies is called the Boston Telephone Company. The incorporators are President Charles Pfaff, Treasurer Robert A. Jordan, Ralph H. Taylor, Nathaniel Sandford and Francis W. Partridge, said to be all of Boston.

Sandford is "Nat" Sandford, who is connected with the People's Telephone Company, the independent company of Haverhill. Taylor is presumably Ralph Taylor of Haverhill and Boston, son of L. H. Taylor, one of the heaviest realty owners of Haverhill.

To Block Independents.

The other is called the Metropolitan Home Telephone Company, and Sandford of the "Boston Independent" makes no bones about incorporating that the Metropolitan is merely in the field to block all opposition to the trust by getting an independent franchise and presumably letting it then go by default, thus spelling the chances of the "Boston Independent."

The incorporators of the "Metropolitan" are President Warren N. Akers, Treasurer Wesley M. Bishop and Frank Grant. Akers has an office at No. 728 Tremont Building, Wesley M. Bishop is in the directory as "assistant janitor" at No. 6 Beacon street.

Sandford of the "Boston Independent" says: "I had an interview with President Akers of the Metropolitan, who asserted he was acting for interests he did not care to disclose and that the incorporators of his company were employes in his office who were acting as figure heads."

"Will Cut Prices One-Half."

"I told him that unless he informed me within twenty-four hours who was back of his company I would take it for granted he was acting for the trust and would draw up own resolutions. That was over a week ago, and I have not heard from Mr. Akers since. If we get a franchise we will cut the price of Bostonian telephones in half.

"Both companies are incorporated for $5,000 under the laws of Massachusetts. The "Boston Independent" men say they will later incorporate for $10,000,000 to swing their operating and financing companies.

A week ago an effort was made in the Board of Aldermen to refer the applications to the Committee on Electric Wires, but this was blocked by Alderman Linehan, who demanded a public hearing.

12,000 JOINERS LOCKED OUT.

NEW YORK, June 7.—Twelve thousand carpenters here are locked out by the Master Carpenters' Association. The lockout will be followed by a general strike of building workers on hundreds of buildings throughout the city, as soon as any attempt is made by the Master Carpenters' Association to employ non-union men.

LEGISLATURE.

RAILROADS SMOOTHING WAY.

The merger bill and the inter-urban bill come before the Senate to-day, both on the question of engrossment. The steam railroads are trying to hold up the merger until they can fix matters smoothly for the inter-urban. Governor Guild, it is said, has let it be known that he does not want a railroad-street railway war at this time in the session and there is now a desperate attempt to "fix" the thing up.

REDISTRICTING UNFAIR.

Even the Republicans who vote for the redistricting bill as reported by the special committee admit that the limit of partisan unfairness has been reached in the laying out of the new Second Middlesex District. The Constitution says the districts "shall be as nearly equal as may be" in number of voters, but the redistricting gives a district of only 35,000, while the next one numbers about 39,000. The two Democratic wards of the old district are taken away, leaving it a hopelessly Republican stronghold.

WAITS BRIBERY REPORT.

Just as soon as the committee on rules makes its report of the bribery investigation the Legislature will be prorogued. All matters now on the calendars and on the tables will be disposed of in a few days. The rules committee hopes to be able to submit its report some day next week but is confident by that means.

TO PUT MEMBERS ON RECORD.

In the House to-day another attempt will be made to put the members on record on the Cambridge Subway Bill by a yea and nay vote on amendments to provide for a subway on the Boston side of the Charles river and for a referendum of the bill so far as it relates to Boston.

TO STOP ICE EXTORTION.

On account of complaints against the extortion of ice dealers, it is likely that a bill will be introduced in the House to-day to put them under a State licensing system like the coal dealers.

MRS. TUCKER TELLS HOW SON HOPES IN THE DEATH HOUSE

Tucker Fears If He Dies Parents Will Leave Home.

Louis wants us to stay at the old home. He feels that perhaps if he should not come home we would give up our house, for it would be so lonely for Mr. Tucker and myself there alone.

It seems to me that it would kill me to move. I love my home, and Louis used to enjoy it so; and he did so much in setting out plants and making the yard pretty.—Mrs. Tucker, in speaking of her visit yesterday to her son.

Mother Visits Him and Finds Him Anxious to Learn All About Treatment of Family at State House—Finds His Prison Garb Is Very Becoming.

By Eleanor Ames.

"I TALKED with Louis for three-quarters of an hour, and when we parted both he and I were more hopeful and cheerful than we have been for a long time," declared Mrs. Tucker yesterday noon at the close of her visit to her son, now confined in the death cell in Charlestown.

"Of course I had to go over all the details of the hearing," she continued, "but really, there was not a great deal of news for me to tell him, because he had read all the papers and was familiar with all the testimony.

"He was much encouraged by it all. He spoke particularly of Mr. Flynn's testimony about his having cut his finger at the theatre, and the fact that George Chase remembered the pin and could identify it so easily and so quickly was splendid news to him.

"'How good every one is to me, mamma,' he said, 'and how anxious to help me.' Louis was always an appreciative boy. And he was always ready to do any one a kindness."

The story of his father's illness in court, which reached him through the papers, caused Tucker much uneasiness.

THOUGHT OF FATHER.

His first question was about his father. He begged that Mr. Tucker would not overexert himself if he could possibly avoid it.

Mr. Tucker's collapse, by the way, was more serious than any one imagined. He frequently has attacks of heart weakness, but he has never had one to compare with that on Tuesday.

After he returned home that night he told his wife that he was particularly glad to be home, for that day he thought he would never see home again.

"I did not believe I could last through it," he said to Mrs. Tucker, "and I fill me know how you could possibly go on alone through all this sorrow."

"Louis was much affected when I told him how the father had suffered," Mrs. Tucker said. "'I have caused you all so much trouble,' he said, but I told him that if we could sometime prove to all the world, what we know, that he is innocent, we can endure the suffering.

"The event of the day which interested him more than anything else was our talk with Governor Guild.

"He wanted me to tell him everything about it; how the Governor looked, what impression he made on us, what we said and what he said.

GOVERNOR'S KINDNESS.

"When I told him how good the Governor was when Mr. Tucker grew faint and how solicitous he was regarding his comfort, Louis's eyes filled with tears. 'He is a good man,' he said, 'and I believe he will be good to me.'

"I told him about the chimney we had in the Governor's room and at his table, and how we were the first people who had ever had such an honor.

"I described to him how the napkins were spread about instead of a tablecloth, and told him all the good things we had to eat and how anxious the Governor was that we should be perfectly comfortable. He was greatly interested."

During the two years that Charles L. Tucker was confined in the East Cambridge jail his parents never saw his cell. When they called to see him, he was always brought down to the reception room.

Mrs. Tucker has often expressed a thankfulness that this was so.

"I don't believe I could bear to have seen him there," she said.

FEARED BOY SUFFERED.

In Charlestown it is different. Here Tucker is not allowed to leave his cell and the parents talk to him across a rail and through bars.

With this change in conditions Mrs. Tucker has undergone a change of feeling.

She is relieved to see just how her son is living. If evidence under such awful circumstances can be called living—and is better content to know for herself his exact surroundings.

All the way from Auburndale yesterday, through the screeching heat, her mother feared for fear that the prison scenes would be unendurable for Louis, but he was pleasantly disappointed, for his cell was cool and airy, and he knew nothing at all of the fierce heat of the outside world.

The mother's interest in her son never abates.

"Last Sunday I awakened in the night," she told me, "and tried to think how the place where Louis is was ventilated. I knew there was no outside window and that the gas burned in the corridor, and so sure me I could not see how he could get one air. Why, I went almost crazy trying to puzzle it out.

HAS PLENTY OF AIR.

"The first thing I looked for when I visited him today was the ventilators, and I found four, so he has plenty of good, fresh air."

Remembering the pride Mrs. Tucker has always taken in having Louis look well groomed and well dressed, even in jail, I spoke of the change to prison garb.

"Is it a shock to find him dressed in prison-made clothes?" I asked.

She shook her head.

"No, and I wonder that it is not. I am sorry to say that the blouse that Louis wears is very becoming to him. It is of blue-striped material, some coarser than gingham, and has a sailor collar and tie. Louis looks better in anything.

"Does he speak of the possibility of this not ending in his favor?" I asked.

"He has used his pen a great deal," she replied. "He has felt that perhaps when we knew that he was coming home we would give up our house, for it would be so lonely for Mr. Tucker and myself there alone.

"He asked me about it last week in East Cambridge, and to-day he wanted to know what we had done about it and urged us to stay there."

WOULD HATE TO MOVE.

Mrs. Tucker's lip quivered and her eyes filled with tears.

"It seems to me that it would kill me to move. I love my home, and Louis used to enjoy it so and had done so much in setting out plants and making the yard pleasant."

When Mrs. Tucker got ready to leave her son she told him that she reached her son she told him that she reached from the subway at the end of the corridor she would throw him a kiss in parting and asked for one in return.

"You'll get it," responded her son, and then called, as he kept his promise, "don't lose hope. I believe all will yet come right."

Mrs. Tucker has the privilege of visiting her son every day, but she will not be able to leave home to-day, but will probably see him to-morrow, when she prays that she may be the bearer of good news from the Governor.

Mother Regrets Son Looks Well In Blue-Striped Prison Garb

I am sorry to say it, but the blouse that Louis is wearing is very becoming to him. It is of blue-striped material, some coarser than gingham, has a sailor collar and is open at the throat. I have seldom seen Louis look better in anything.—Mrs. Tucker, after she had seen his new prison garb yesterday.

THREE HURT, SCORES IN PERIL IN SUBWAY BLAST

SHORT CIRCUIT EXPLOSIONS HURL MANHOLES INTO AIR AND CAUSES STAMPEDE.

Subway officials began to-day a strict investigation into the explosions at the Boylston and Pleasant street stations last night, in which three persons were seriously injured and the lives of scores endangered. P. J. Kennedy, city superintendent of wires, and W. H. Conroy, chief inspector, early to-day declined to make a statement as to the date of the last inspection of the subway lines until they have an opportunity of searching the records of the department. It is likely that a statement from the superintendent of wires will be made in the course of the day.

Of the three victims of the accident all are progressing nicely, and it is announced that none is in immediate danger.

Make Light of Affair.

A statement issued by the subway officials to-day in connection with the accident says:

"A short circuit in a manhole of the subway near Boylston street at about 5:25 o'clock caused the fire.

"That how the short circuit occurred it is impossible to say at present. It might have happened from defective insulation or crossing the wires. A thorough investigation is under way.

"As soon as the full extent of the trouble was realized the power was shut off from the subway and the lights turned on. Arrangements, however, were made to care for passengers on the surface lines as far as possible.

"The Pleasant square loop was not interfered with at all. The Park street subway loop was in working order by 6:15. The elevated cars started later.

"No one was seriously hurt, and the damage was very small."

Hundreds in Panic.

In spite of this statement, one of the most exciting scenes ever recorded in Boston occurred at the subway station last evening when the explosions threw the underground passengers into a panic. Caught midway between Park and Boylston streets, hundreds of passengers were almost overcome by the dense smoke fumes.

It was at 5:30 that the first explosion occurred in the Boylston street station. It was of a dull, heavy nature, like a blast of dynamite. Almost before the crowds could realize its significance clouds of dense, heavy smoke poured into the station. A second which was made for the stairway, the smoke growing thicker each moment. Women and children were thrust aside, and men fought with each other in the stampede. Guards sprang to the edge of the platform to prevent any overcome falling across the fatal third rail.

Man Holes Blown Off.

The fire had not been burning more than twenty minutes when the manholes of the cable conduits blew out between Boylston street and Pleasant street.

Four of these blew up within a space of ten minutes, with explosions like discharges of heavy cannon.

The two explosions on Shawmut avenue near Pleasant street were the worst. The windows in the shops at Nos. 54, 56, 58 and 61 Shawmut avenue were smashed, and Miss Anna O'Donnell, 26 years old, No. 200 Shawmut avenue, and Andrew Reid, 45 years old, No. 34 Appleton street, were injured.

Chief Mullen and the fire department had been notified before the power was shut off and entered the subway at the Boylston street station, although there was great danger for anyone, however familiar with the subway, to enter in the dense smoke which filled every foot of space between the walls.

12 NEAR DEATH BY EXPLOSION OF DYNAMITE

Part of House of Frank Lanzillo of Wakefield Was Wrecked While Occupants Slept.

Twelve Italians escaped annihilation in the home of Frank Lanzillo of Newhall court, Wakefield, at 2 o'clock this morning, when a heavy charge of dynamite was exploded under the L of the house.

Lanzillo, through a small Italian boy who speaks some English, stated to Chief of Police Brackbank to-day that an attempt had been made to assassinate him and every occupant of his house. Whom he suspects the police have not been able to learn yet, for the man can speak o English and the boy could not tell.

A large amount of dynamite, which had been secreted under the kitchen built as an "L" to the house, was exploded. That the full force of the explosive been exerted to an upward direction every one of the dozen Italians living in Lanzillo's house probably would have been killed. As it was, the kitchen was blown off and the roof completely wrecked. In the house at the time were three children, four women and five men.

POLICE SUSPICIOUS OF SUPPOSED SUICIDE

LACONIA, N. H., June 7.—The police are investigating to-day to determine if the death of William A. Hutchinson is a clear case of suicide. Hutchinson's dead body was found yesterday in a room in the Mount Belknap House. A revolver lay on a commode close by, and there were also two bottles partly filled with carbolic acid, some of which Hutchinson had evidently swallowed before he shot himself. Financial troubles are advanced as a theory for the deed.

ROOSEVELT PRAISES DAVITT, HIS FRIEND

JUDICIAL ROBES TRAILED IN MUD

—JUDGE E. IRVING SMITH.

E. Irving Smith, of Waltham, associate justice of the Second district court of Eastern Middlesex, yesterday addressed a letter to Governor Guild concerning the Tucker case. In it he declares that the Governor is being led to violate all the rules of common law and the Bill of Rights in the constitution of this State.

Mr. Smith asserts that Justices Sheldon and Sherman have trailed their judicial ermine in the mud at the Governor's request, and that the Executive is being advised by former Attorney-General Herbert Parker. He declares that, in view of the fact of these two justices who heard the case sitting upon issues of executive clemency, it may be expected of Warden Bridges to request of the judges to assist at the execution.

Mr. Smith is a well-known lawyer, with offices in Boston and Waltham. His letter to Governor Guild follows:

Decide on Life or Death.

To His Excellency, Curtis Guild, Jr.:

NO person in this Commonwealth values the Tucker life above the plain and simple rights of the citizen living in any place between the Berkshire Hills and Provincetown. You are to decide, as the supreme executive of the Commonwealth, upon the life of a citizen, and in such capacity you, and your successors in office, have the power to decide, as the instance, but in the future, and with respect to all of us.

You are being led to violate the instincts of the English-speaking race. You are being led to violate the rules of the common law. You are being led to violate the Bill of Rights and the constitution of Massachusetts.

Why? Executive, the Judicial and the Legislative Departments of the government—not only under the Constitution of Massachusetts of 1780, but also under the fundamental conceptions of the Constitution of the United States—are to be kept separate and distinct.

Justice Trailed in Mud.

For what purpose? Beside other reasons, to prevent beyond all reinterference, the iniquities of the continental system that combined legislation with inquisition, inquisition with trial, trial with judgment and judgment with death.

To see two judges of this Commonwealth trail their judicial ermine in the mud, at your request, for the sake of following up and pushing to the utmost extremity the judgment of execution rendered by three jurors, by assisting the Executive to perform its own functions, on a most solemn occasion, on an appeal for Executive clemency, is shocking to the lawyers of this State, and weakens the respect in which all good citizens should hold the Executive.

That these judges are doing so at your request simply demonstrates that you have no adequate conception of the high prerogatives of your office, but makes clear to all that the arts of that sublime exemplification of a country lawyer, with ability to execute the tricks of the horse-trader in dealing with issues of life and death—our Ex-Attorney-General—are successful in pushing a capital case to judgment and execution.

Misled by Parker.

Don't be misled, Governor. There is not a lawyer in the State but sees the point. You were misled by Parker to rule in the first instance, that no evidence could be introduced that was not now—in short, such evidence as might be introduced on a motion for a new trial. He knew better; you ought to have known better. Any evidence whatever which could influence you upon legal, humane or equitable grounds, is admissible in the full hearing.

You were misled by him, in the second place—and this I think the whole Bar of Massachusetts regrets—to refer the justices of the court which condemned Tucker to assist you in determining the issue of an appeal to your executive clemency.

Think of it! The judges who condemned passing upon issues involved in the exercise of executive clemency! If you are right, Warden Bridges may request the judges to assist at the execution. Please study the Constitution of your State, the canons of the English common law and the platforms of the founders of the American Commonwealths!

Very Respectfully,
E. IRVING SMITH.

NOTED MEN TO HONOR MEMORY OF DAVITT HERE

Great Meeting in Faneuil Hall To-night to Be Addressed by Distinguished Speakers.

Seven distinguished speakers will pay tribute to Michael Davitt at the memorial meeting of the United Irish Leagues of America in Faneuil Hall to-night. Widespread interest has been manifested in the programme, not only in Boston, but in other cities of New England, and the hall, it is expected, will be crowded long before the opening of the meeting.

Invitations have been extended to the Mayors of nearly cities and to all State officials to be present, and in addition to representative lists of prominent Irish organization workers, noted guests from all spheres will do honor to the memory of the famous Irish leader.

Addresses will be made by Governor Curtis Guild, Mayor John F. Fitzgerald, Josiah Quincy, Rt. Rev. Monsignor Doulis O'Callaghan, General Charles W. Darrell, James E. Cotter and Patrick Egan, former United States Minister to Chili.

Egan is one of the oldest surviving comrades of Mr. Davitt in the historic "Land League" struggle twenty-five years ago, and for some time served as treasurer of the organization in Ireland.

Later he served as president of the Irish national organization in this country.

CRACKING JOKES, CHEWING GUM, MAKING VERSES AND DANCING JIGS, ROCKEFELLER HAS THE TIME OF HIS LIFE ON SHIPBOARD

Richest Man in the World Develops an Entirely New Nature on Voyage to England Just Ended.

By William Hoster

Special correspondent for the Hearst News Service aboard steamer Deutschland.

SPECIAL CABLE TO THE BOSTON AMERICAN.

ON BOARD STEAMER DEUTSCHLAND, Plymouth, England, June 6.—When John D. Rockefeller stepped ashore this afternoon he declared the voyage has been the pleasantest time of his life.

The Deutschland arrived two hours behind her schedule time. A startling rumor explains the delay. It is said that in "coaling up" the greatest precautions had been adopted by the engineers for fear of possible bombs from Anarchists, and that practically every shovelful was carefully inspected before being thrown into the furnaces.

Just before our arrival to-day I had a short talk with Mr. Rockefeller, during which, in a few snappy paragraphs, he outlined what may be epitomized as the Rockefeller philosophy.

The Standard Oil Wisdom.

"Labor and capital are two blind forces which require careful, intelligent handling to make them work together to do the work of the world," he said. "I see no reason why they cannot work in perfect harmony. I believe that each will adjust itself to the requirements of the situation, and the tendency is toward that now.

"I like to take a cheerful, happy view of things and I believe it is justified in this case.

"The world is growing better. The outlook would be frightful were it not so.

"Religion and education are the two forces that will set things right."

"The great man is one who does the most for humanity."

He talked to me in a direct, earnest way, that was at least convincing of sincerity, and he seemed anxious to impress one with his optimism.

Mr. Rockefeller landed, declaring he was sorry the trip was over. He appears to have had a really delightful time and has exhibited a cordiality and democracy which, odd as it seems, have made him really popular among the other passengers. He was not seasick; his appetite was excellent, and he indulged in nearly all the ship's amusements except the seductive card games that go to make fleeting hours in the smoking room.

He has gained five pounds in weight since he sailed from New York. his rather pale complexion has taken on ruddy tints from sunshine and sea air, and his cheerful infectious smile has lightened the lines of care that marked in his face when he boarded the ship.

Voyager Develops New Nature.

Altogether it has been a remarkable voyage, this sixday journey of the richest man in the world.

It has developed a new and hitherto unsuspected side of Rockefeller nature, which in the last day or two was the talk of the ship.

As if determined to win the good opinion of his fellow passengers, Mr. Rockefeller has been almost constantly on deck since the voyage began. He has patted every baby aboard joyfully, and chatted with any and every passenger with whom he came in contact.

His attentions to the ladies of his party have been assiduous and marked by courteous gallantry, and his hand-shaking ability has proved to be of unusual order.

On occasions he even indulged in impromptu verse-making, chewed chewing gum with ferocious activity, made jests, posed before the camera, danced jigs and generally contrived to build up a reputation as one of the most popular men aboard the steamer.

On Sunday the second cabin was the scene of a very unusual and striking incident. Mr. Rockefeller visited there and was accorded a genuine demonstration.

He made a few remarks, in which he urged his audience to practice economy and charity, and his genial diffusion of advice and comradeship won him three rousing cheers.

For Rockefeller this was a strange sound, heard probably for the first time in his life, and also for the first time in his life the Standard oil magnate tastes the joys of popular acclaim. There were at least four first cabin passengers present when he delivered his little speech and they joined in the demonstration.

Some of Rockefeller's Sea Voyage Amusements

Patted every baby aboard.
Chatted with every passenger he met.
Attended ladies of his party with gallantry.
Made impromptu verses.
Chewed gum with avidity.
Cracked jokes.
Posed before cameras.
Danced jigs.

Child Gives Him Penny.

As he was departing a little girl made a distinct hit with everybody by gravely presenting a penny to the financier. With it went a prophecy that it would be lucky. Mr. Rockefeller evidently thought it might, because he stuffed the coin carefully away and rewarded the youngster with a benefit smile.

Mr. Rockefeller was responsible for one frightful argument that has set two steamships boiling. It has been the problem of the ship just who gave $100 to the concert fund on Monday.

Rockefeller claims that he gave it, but persons near say that he put a green bill in the plate. Dr. Bigger supports Rockefeller's allegation, but the smoking room is firmly committed to the belief that it was only a dollar, and the girl who made the collection also declares that the bill was of the common green or long green variety.

Mr. Rockefeller protested to the captain that he had only one $100 bill, and this he has not got now. He told the captain that no mistake was possible, but there has been plenty of talk among the passengers that the dollar bill was not only possible, but probable.

In a way the incident was rather unpleasant, but as a sort of "how old is Ann" proposition it worked nicely, all arguments on the subject resulting in a circle.

Mr. Rockefeller's devotion to deck perambulation has moved the passengers to mild astonishment. On Saturday he covered approximately ten miles of deck space. His favorite amusement seemed to be the "constitutional."

His next great distraction was shuffleboard. It cannot be said that Mr. Rockefeller won distinction in this, but he seemed nevertheless to amuse himself, and was unable to arouse the perpetual groans of passengers who viewed the contests before he himself and his companions.

Accessible to All

The general expectation that Mr. Rockefeller would exhibit austerity and seclude himself in his rooms was pleasantly disappointed, both day and night. During the whole voyage his invariable programme was to arise at 7 o'clock in the morning and retire at 9 o'clock at night. And during his whole waking period he was set merely accessible to conversation, but encouraged to invite and delight in the tete-a-tetes with the other voyagers.

Sunday night the captain's dinner he attracted unusual attention and made a happy impression. There was a feeling of camaraderie among the diners, and the richest man in the world thrust behind him temporarily his wealth and scoffed at the years that weigh him down. The waiters went noiselessly hither and thither attired in fantastic garb, and cut tying novel, illuminated ice cream dishes.

In the midst of the fun Rockefeller suddenly clapped upon his head one of the green pinching caps given as favors with the ices. He sat laughing, chatting and clapping his hands until the jolly party disbanded for the evening. He seemed like a young man at a reunion of his college class.

The all-king was very punctual at meals, and his attention to the menu somewhat puzzled those observers who have regarded him as a hopeless dyspeptic. If he lives on eggs and milk at Lakewood he certainly takes liberty east of Sandy Hook.

In his talks to his fellow passengers Mr. Rockefeller displayed a penchant for confidence. He remarked that he had been grossly misrepresented by the American newspapers and when he said this he spoke in a mournful manner and seemed very much in earnest. Passing from his own troubles to the subject of friends, Mr. Rockefeller paid a glowing and generous tribute to the late President Harper of Chicago University.

"Mr. Harper," he said, feelingly, "was the greatest man I ever knew. I was closer to opening my heart to him than to any other person."

His manner in referring to the late head of Chicago University showed that it was impossible for Rockefeller to think of Professor Harper without being deeply moved.

Another time the Standard Oil master commented on the style of his own health.

"The doctor," he said, "tells me that I am like a prizefighter, and certainly I feel like one. I feel assured that I can beat Mr. Carnegie at golf."

Rockefeller said, in course of general conversation, that he has little faith in the man who makes elaborate plans on paper and then fails to carry them out. It is manifest from several of his conversations that he believes in strenuous efforts to insure success.

Once he stopped in one of his walks to pat a child on the head, and said:

"Baby, dear, the world is ahead of you." Then he turned to the child's parents and added:

"I wish that he does something worth while."

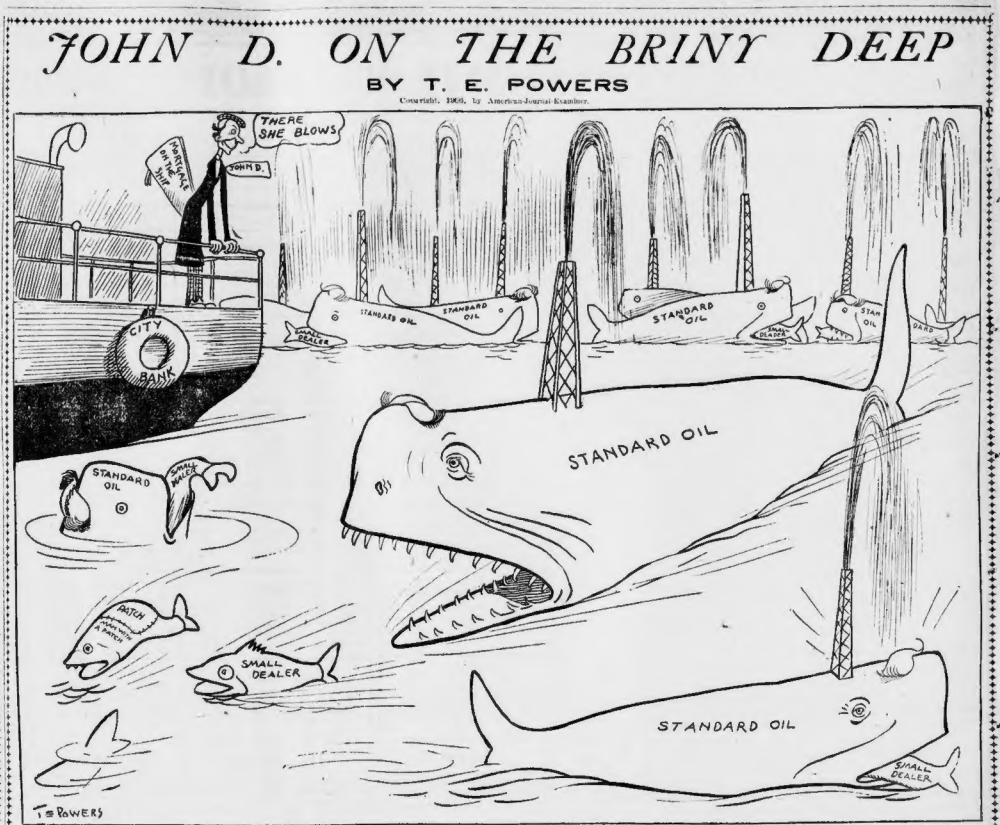
Manifestly, Mr. Rockefeller's active business career has ended.

He says as much. His plan of life includes the leaving of work to others and the pursuit of pleasures, such as golfing and taking exercise on his estate.

Mrs. Rockefeller has not been well, and Miss Stillman is believed to be very ill.

Mr. Rockefeller spent a great deal of his time with her and was extremely solicitous for her comfort.

He plans to return to the United States on July 20.



NEWS OF THE THEATRES

Boston's Summer theatrical season is on in earnest, and the attractions are of high class in the principal resorts. The chief event of the week will be the return and positively farewell engagement of Bernhardt on Saturday.

Keith's Theatre

Besides the Endeties Woman's Orchestra, who are scoring a big hit with musicloving at Keith's, there is a fund of excellent variety bill on, as remarks aredo headed by Burt Leslie, Robert L. Dailey and company, Mr. and Mrs. Leo Ford, a new slang extravaganza, the likes of which has never been heard on the stage before, Horace Goldin, the world-famous magician, heads the bill at Keith's next week.

Colonial Theatre

Richard Carle is receiving added hilarities of how popular he is with audiences of all sorts in Boston. Last Winter, when the gold weather deprived the actor on hand, he packed the Colonial Theatre with "The Mayor of Tokio," and now he is doing just the same thing at this period of his Summer season to comfe open here. The work is flooding him ever.

Boston Theatre

It is Sarah Bernhardt who spreads the supreme dramatic feast in "L'Aiglon," "Hamlet," "Frou Frou," "La Sorciere" and "Camille," in which she will say farewell to Boston at the Boston Theatre next Saturday. She shows herself in these characters as the greatest actress in the world. She will play "Camille" in the afternoon.

Majestic Theatre

When an incomparable seat is put into a musical piece that is full of comedy, ginger and real music, something happens. This combination is in "The Yankee," at the Majestic Theatre, and the "something" that is happening is the "S. R. O." sign which is put out nightly.

Castle Square Theatre

So popular is "The Mikado" and so meritorious the opening of the Castle Square Summer season that the Castle Square is being filled to the doors at every performance. Next Monday "Il Trovatore" will replace the Gilbert and Sullivan opera for one week only.

Empire Theatre

At the Empire Theatre this week "The Private Secretary" has proved a great success. "A Midsummer Night's Dream" is to make the final attraction by the Empire Stock Company next week. The moving pictures of the disaster at San Francisco are shown a half hour before each performance.

Tremont Theatre

Harry Bulger and his associates in Hen. W. Savage's merry musical production, "The Man from Now," at the Tremont, is fast allowing the hot wave to interfere with the giving of enjoyable performances, and the audiences nightly tax the capacity of the theatre to the utmost, in itself a fitting testimonial of the worth of the clever attraction at the coolest theatre in Boston.

Palace Theatre

Lew Stevens presents "Piddletown" and his company of famous stars in "Lafayette, We Come," at the Palace Theatre this week. It cannot be said that Mr. Rockefeller won distinction in this, but he seemed nevertheless to amuse himself, and was unable to arouse the perpetual groans of passengers who viewed the contests before himself and his companions.

Bowdoin Square Theatre.

"Down by the Sea," the scenic melodrama at the Bowdoin this week, is one of the biggest hits of several months. It carries the salt sea air and the characters are those with whom seashore people have long been familiar. A great storm scene and a lighthouse view with dashing waves are the features.

Austin & Stone's Museum.

It is just a year since the "Minstrel Maids" started their round of pleasure at Austin & Stone's, and it has been a year of great pleasure for them and particularly for the patrons. The following in the curio hall this week have an anniversary aspect.

Lyceum Theatre

Manager Rockefeller's new stock company at the Lyceum has made good. An entire change of burlesque and acts is given each week and the fun seems to grow better and more amusing with each performance.

Barnum & Bailey Circus.

Barnum and Bailey Circus, after touring New England, will visit New Brunswick and Nova Scotia for the first time in a quarter of a century. The management has been petitioned for several years to visit the cities in the provinces, but not until this year was it able to make the long journey possible. The circus will be in Boston in a week.

Norumbega Park

This beautiful park, which is now open for the Summer, is more attractive than ever before, not only because of the changes and improvements made there but by the additional features provided for the benefit of patrons. The privilege of taking a trip up and down the Charles in a naphtha launch is a decidedly pleasant one.

36 GET LAW DEGREE.

Thirty-six students of the evening law school of the Allston Young Men's Christian Association were given their degrees last evening.

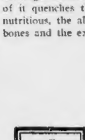
"Beer has a number of pleasant and valuable qualities. No other beverage contains such a combination of useful properties. The water of it quenches the thirst, the carbonic acid refreshes, the extracts are nutritious, the alcohol furthers digestion, the mineral salts build up the bones and the extract of hops acts as a tonic.

No. 5.

A Lucky Man

By D. M. R.



LUCKY the man who has a roof
To shelter him from rain;
Lucky the man who hears it fall
Against his window pane.

Lucky the man who has a fire
To keep him from the cold;
Lucky the man who has a wife
To love him when he's old.

With rain without and fire within,
There's something lacking here;
He isn't quite a lucky man
Without Pfaff's Lager Beer.

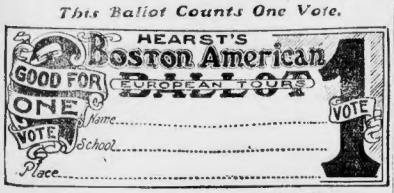
EUROPEAN TOUR ELECTION

FAVORITES ADVANCE IN THE TOUR LISTS

This Ballot Counts One Vote.



Mail Votes to the European Tour Editor, P. O. Box 5131, Boston.

By a gain of 10,000 votes Miss Susan B. Gould of the Lafayette School in Everett yesterday assumed three points in the Greater Boston Division of the European Tour Election.

Miss Gould went above Miss Madeline Driscoll of Roxbury, Miss Violet Creber of Dorchester and Miss Ella M. Brotchie of Waltham, while these candidates rested and held their votes.

Miss Minnie E. Donovan of Lincoln School, Quincy, who has polled steadily for days, made the best advance of her campaign, going upwards of 7000 votes, perfecting the "Scholarship Class" of the Metropolitan Division by a gain of 15,000 votes for the day. Miss Elizabeth Rogers of Charlestown displaced Miss Madeline Fogelson of Malden and took position below Miss Donovan, Lower down in the list Miss Ella H. Burls went for ward one step.

Miss Bertrice L. Hall of Putnam, Ct., passed Miss Grace L. E. Milligan in the Rhode Island and Connecticut Division.

Miss Annabelle F. Lambert of Manchester advanced two points in the division of Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

There are now BUT EIGHTEEN DAYS left of the European Tour Election.

DOCTORS RUSH TO SEE BABIES AT WONDERLAND

Infants in Incubators One of Sights Seen With Coupon From Boston American.

MORE COUPONS SUNDAY

The flood of BOSTON AMERICAN guests and the opening of the baby incubator building were the features of the final day this week of the BOSTON AMERICAN'S free admission ticket offer to Wonderland, Revere.

In next Sunday's BOSTON AMERICAN another coupon will be printed, entitling admission to Wonderland, just as last Sunday's BOSTON AMERICAN coupon gave free entrance Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. Readers of next BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN need only to clip the Wonderland coupon from the paper to provide themselves with admission to the new million-dollar pleasure park, which is now the great feature of Revere.

The final day yesterday of the BOSTON AMERICAN coupons for this week was of especial interest to the ticket takers at Wonderland and to the management of the baby incubator show. The BOSTON AMERICAN guests, despite the rain, flocked into Wonderland by the thousand. They completed men, women and children from Greater Boston and beyond, all glad to take advantage of the generous offer of the BOSTON AMERICAN.

Mayor Fors Tele.

The opening of the incubator show added to the attractions already open to patrons of the famous pleasure resort. This opening has been delayed a few days on accounts of the complicated nature of the enterprise, involving as it does some of the most elaborate scientific and expensive propositions that ever entered into a public attraction.

But all was readiness yesterday, and Manager Christopher T. Ryan was able to open the doors of the incubator building to the thousands of interested patrons.

Speaking of patrons, not the least eager were many members of the American Medical Association, now holding its fifty-seventh annual convention in Boston. The doctors from all parts of the country gathered at Wonderland with first interest in the babies who are being matured in the incubators.

The babies themselves. There are several of them, tiny tots literally, in whom the breath of life has been preserved through the scientific appliance of this incubator treatment.

Not the least interesting of these is Baby John Anthony Frederick, five days old of Mr. and Mrs. James Frederick of Winthrop place, Revere. The baby, who was described in last Sunday's BOSTON AMERICAN, he was naturally a source of especial attraction from the throng which crowded the incubator building on the opening day.

Women in Majority.

Women were in a majority in the patronage of the incubator enterprise. Mothers of strong, healthy and hearty babies came eagerly to the incubators and gazed with maternal interest at the little ones as they sheltered within their glass-faced houses. They asked all sorts of questions, private and confidential, of the nurses who had babies in charge. In fact, the nurses were kept busy answering queries of all sorts and descriptions from people of every kind. The queries ranged from an intelligent interest in the incubator babies down to all sorts of questions which showed that the inquirer's knowledge of children was much like that brand of evidence which the lawyers call "hearsay."

But through it all there ranged a general feeling of keen and kindly feeling toward the incubator building babies and an equally general approval of the methods being taken to preserve them to become boys and girls and eventually men and women.

By night all connected with the incubator show were tired, but nevertheless pleased with their opening day and the obvious public interest.

JOKER IN SUBWAY BILL GIVES "L" LIFE FRANCHISE

Year eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, shall be revoked, except the locations following, which shall not be revocable except as provided in the first clause of section nineteen of said chapter five hundred, ending with the words "Public Statutes," or so long as the company has the right under the provisions of this act to complete the respective subways in Cambridge connecting therewith, namely:—its location from the Cambridge line upon and over the Cambridge bridge and its approaches

THE "JOKER" IN L SUBWAY GRAB BILL.

Fac-simile of proposed law showing how the one little word "or" gives Elevated a Life Tenure in the franchise for an L structure over the Charles River Dam.

Addition of Word "or" Makes Clause Alternative and Franchise Irrevocable.

It was discovered yesterday that an unknown to the officials of the city of Cambridge who passed upon the Cambridge Subway Bill, now before the Legislature, a phrase was added which made the franchise granted to the Boston Elevated for a location on the new Charles River dam, absolutely irrevocable. The principal naturally came through the insertion of the simple word "or," and not a person can be found who will admit that he even knew of the existence of that word in the particular section which it affects.

The chapter, as Representative Peabody of Cambridge, who fathers the bill from the committee on metropolitan affairs, says, included in section 20 these words:

"Upon acceptance of this act by the company, the Elevated Railway locations within the city of Cambridge granted to the company by chapter * * * shall be revoked, except the locations following, which shall not be revocable except as provided in the first clause of section nineteen of said chapter 500, ending with the words 'Public Statutes,' so long as the company has the right under the provisions of this act to complete the respective subways in Cambridge connecting therewith * * *."

Word "Or" Inserted.

The bill is now before the House of Representatives and has passed to a third reading. Yesterday it was discovered that and why.

the clause published above now reads:

" * * * of said chapter 500, ending with the words 'Public Statutes,' or so long as the company,' etc.

This change was shown Representative Peabody yesterday afternoon and he said that he was unaware of its existence. He said he was positive that the change did not emanate from the committee and was of the belief that it was a printer's typographical error.

Mr. Peabody also said that Attorney Pillsbury, representing the Boston Elevated road, who had assisted in drawing the act, was surprised to learn of the existence of the word and was glad to consent to its being expunged. Those who know of L road methods will be surprised to learn that Mr. Pillsbury was surprised. Mr. Peabody said he would use every effort to secure a change of the vote passed by the Legislature, and the enactment of the measure in its original form, before the "printer's typographical error" occurred.

Makes Clause Alternative.

Without the word "or," the later clause limits the former. With it, the clause is alternative and under it there is no doubt that the Boston Elevated would secure an irrevocable and irrepealable franchise.

Whether or not the Legislature changes the word so suddenly or so carelessly introduced, it is suggested that the legislative lobbyist committee, if it were in existence, might profitably look into the matter of who inserted the qualifying word.

BOSTON MAN MAKES SOCIETY BELLE WIFE

PITTSBURG, June 7.—A local society wedding took place last night, when Charles A. Powers of Boston, married Harriet K. Wilson, a society belle of this city. Five hundred people attended the wedding, which took place at the bride's home on Pearl Hill road. The bridesmaids were Elsie L. Fuller and Mabel Wilson, and Roy E. Southworth of Boston was best man. The Rev. Mr. Saunders performed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Powers will live in Boston.

CHARGED WITH HERESY, QUITS

KANSAS CITY, June 7.—As a result of charges of heresy against him, which he found would take the form of a demand for his expulsion from the church, Rev. Charles Ferguson, an Episcopalian rector, although in charge of the Unitarian church of All Saints, yesterday tendered his resignation.

For several years Rev. Charles Ferguson has been in charge of All Souls Unitarian Church, Kansas City, while still enrolled on the Episcopal clergy lists.

Rev. Mr. Ferguson was formerly rector of Christ Episcopal Church, Eastport, Me. He lived in Boston four years ago.

THOUGHT DEAD, HE COMES HOME

HAVERHILL, June 7.—Everett B. Morrell, the young man who disappeared May 20, comes home to-day. He was thought by his relatives to have been drowned in Chadwick Pond, but turned up in New York.

The police say that Morrell took out a marriage license on May 18, with the name of the prospective bride as Miss Edna Haight of Newburyport. Miss Haight has little to say about the matter, but admitted that she had received a letter from Morrell in New York.

Famous Novel That Has Startled the Nation

THE JUNGLE

BY Upton Sinclair

Thrilling Story of Packingtown

SYNOPSIS.

THE story of "The Jungle," Upton Sinclair's novel, which has caused the government investigation into the methods employed by the Beef Trust, has its origin in an actual Packingtown romance.

In Ashland avenue—"back of the stock yards"—the wedding took place. The first chapter merely shows a broad-shouldered butcher being wedded to a young girl who acts as him a hero. The wedding in all its grotesqueness is described in this chapter. The wedding ceremony is typical of Packingtown. At the end of dawn, when Jurgis and his bride, Ona, depart, sadly realizing that the contributions, which are a feature of the feast, will not nearly bear the expense of the ceremony.

Practically penniless, Jurgis tells his bride she shall not return to work in the packing house—he will work early and late. He could not work harder, but the thought of seeing her contribute toward their support was abhorrent to him.

On arriving in Chicago, J. Szvedilas, a Lithuanian, who ran a delicatessen store in Packingtown, guided Jurgis, Ona, Marija and the remainder of the party through the stock yards, after he had given them lodging. In this section of the story the author records some of the things that fascinate the country.

CHAPTER III.

Copyright, 1906, by Doubleday, Page & Co. All rights reserved.

IN his capacity as delicatessen vender, Jokubas Szeqvilas had many acquaintances. Among these was one of the special policemen employed by Durham, whose duty it frequently was to pick out men for employment. Jokubas had never tried it, but he expressed a certainty that he could get some of his friends a job through this man. It was agreed, after consultation, that he should make the effort with old Antanas and with Jonas. Jurgis was confident of his ability to get work for himself, unassisted by any one.

As we have said before, he was not mistaken in this. He had gone to Brown's and stood there not more than half an hour before one of the bosses noticed his form towering above the rest, and signaled to him. The colloquy which followed was brief and to the point:

"Ever been in a yards?"

"Yes; Lit-uanian." (Jurgis had studied this word carefully.)

"Jugger?"

"Je." (A nod.)

"Worker here before?"

"No stand."

(Signals and gesticulations on the part of the boss. Vigorous shakes of the head by Jurgis.)

"Shovel gists?"

"No stamen." (More shakes of the head.)

"Zarnos. Pagalkstis. Saluota!" (Inlattre motions.)

"Je."

"See door. Durys?" (Pointing.)

"Je."

"To-morrow, seven o'clock. Understand? Rytoj. Prieszpietys! Septyni!"

"Dekui, tamistai!" ("Thank you, sir.") And that was all. Jurgis turned away, and then in a sudden rush the full realization of his triumph swept over him, and he gave a yell and a jump and started off on a run. He had a job! He had a job! And he went all the way home as if upon wings, and burst into the house like a cyclone, to the rage of the lodgers who had just turned in for their daily sleep.

Meantime Jokubas had been to see his friend the policeman, and secured his encouragement, so it was a happy party. There being no more to be done that day, the shop was left under the care of Lucia, and her husband proceeded to show his friends the sights of Packingtown.

Jokubas did this with the air of a country gentleman showing a party of visitors over his estate; he was an old-time resident, and all the wonders had grown up under his eyes, and he had a personal pride in them. The packers might own the land, but he claimed the landmarks, and there was no one to say nay to this.

IN SPECKLESS WONDER.

They passed down the busy street that led to the yards. It was still early morning, and everything was at its high tide of activity. A steady stream of workers was pouring through the gate—employes of the higher grades at their desks, and stenographers and such. For the women there were waiting big two-horse wagons, which set off at a gallop as fast as they were filled.

In the distance there was heard again the lowing of the cattle, and an undertone of ocean calling. They followed it, this time, as eager as children in sight of a circus menagerie—which, indeed, the scene a good deal resembled.

They crossed the railroad tracks, and then on each side of the street were the pens full of cattle; they would have stopped to look, but Jokubas hurried them on, to where there was a stairway and a raised gallery, from which everything could be seen. There they stood, staring, breathless with wonder.

There is over a square mile of space in the yards, and more than half of it is occupied by cattle pens; north and south as far as the eye can reach there were cattle driving cattle. They were drovers and stock raisers, who had come from far States, and brokers and commission merchants, and buyers for all the big packing houses. Here and there they would stop to inspect a bunch of cattle, or have would be a parley, brief and businesslike. Yet buyer would nod or drop his whip, and that would mean a bargain; and he would note it in his little book, down in a handful of others he had made that morning.

Then Jokubas pointed out the place where the cattle were driven to be weighed, upon a great scale that would weigh a hundred thousand pounds at once and record it automatically. It was near to the east entrance that they stood, and all along this east side the yards ran by the railroad tracks, into which the cars were run, loaded with cattle. All night long this had been going on, and now the pens were full; by to-night they would all be empty, and the same thing would be done again.

ON TO THEIR FATE.

"And what will become of all these creatures?" cried Teta Elzbieta.

"By to-night," Jokubas answered, "they will all be killed and cut up; and over there on the other side of the packing houses are more railroad tracks, where the cars come to take them away."

There were two hundred and fifty miles of track within the yards, their guide went on to tell them. They brought about ten thousand head of cattle every day and as many hogs, and half as many sheep—which meant some eight or ten million live creatures turned into food every year.

One stood and watched, and little by little caught the drift of the tide, as it set in the direction of the packing houses. There were great gangs of cattle being driven to the chutes, which were roadways about fifteen feet wide, raised high above the pens. In these chutes the stream of animals was continuous; it was quite uncanny to watch them, pressing on to their fate, all unsuspicious—a very river of death.

Our friends were not poetical, and the sight suggested to them no metaphors of human destiny; they thought only of the wonderful efficiency of it all. The chutes into which the hogs went climbed high up—to the very top of the distant buildings; and Jokubas explained that the hogs were up by the power of their own legs, and then their weight carried them back through all the processes necessary to make them into pork.

"They don't waste anything here," said the guide, and this he heard and added a witticism, which he was pleased that his unsophisticated friends should take to be his own: "They use everything about the hog except the squeal."

In front of Brown's General Office building there grows a tiny bit of grass, and this, you may learn, is the only bit of green thing in Packingtown; likewise this is just about the last that you will see of it, for in trade of all the guides, is the one gleam of humor that you will find there.

Entering one of the Durham buildings they found a number of other visitors waiting; and before long there came a guide to escort them through the place. They make a great feature of showing strangers through the packing plants, for it is a good advertisement. But pouns Jokubas whispered maliciously that the visitors did not see any more than the packers wanted them to.

They climbed a long series of stairways outside of the building, to the top of five or six stories. Here were the chute, with its river of hogs, all patiently toiling upward; there was a place for them to rest to cool off, and they through another passageway they went into a room from which there is no returning for hogs.

THE WHEEL OF DEATH

It was a long, narrow room, with a gallery along it for visitors; and in the middle there was a great iron wheel, about twenty feet in circumference, with iron hogs here and there along its edge.

Upon both sides of this wheel there was a narrow space, into which came the hogs at the end of their journey; in the midst of them stood a great man armed with a pole and bare-chested. He was resting for the moment, for the next few seconds after the hogs were cleaning up. In a minute or two, however, it began slowly to revolve, and then the men upon each side of it sprang to work. They had chains which they fastened about the leg of the nearest hog, and the other end of the chain they hooked into one of the rings upon the wheel. So, as the wheel turned, a hog was suddenly jerked off his feet and borne aloft.

At the same time the ear was assailed by a most terrific squealing. A power started in alarm, the women turned pale and shrank back. The man who had charge of another, louder and yet more agonizing—for once started upon this journey, no hog ever came back; at the top of the wheel he was shunted off upon a trolley, and went sailing down the room.

And meantime another was swung up, and then another and another, until there was a double line of them, each dangling by a leg and squealing, squealing—and squealing. The uproar was appalling, deafening. It was perfectly unendurable; it was too much sound for the room to hold it, and it echoed back and forth and rang in the ceiling crack.

There were high shouts and low squeals, grunts and wails of agony; there would come a momentary lull, and a single hog, outburst, louder than ever, surging up to a deafening climax. It was only for some of the visitors—the men would look at each other, laughing feebly, and the women would stand with hands clenched, and the blood would flush their faces, and the tears starting in their eyes.

Meantime, hanging out of all these things, the men upon the floor were going about their work. Neither squeals of hogs nor tears of visitors made any difference to them; one by one they hooked up the hogs, and one by one with a swift stroke they slit their throats. There was a long line of hogs, with squeals and life-blood ebbing away together; until at last each started again, and vanished with a splash into a huge vat of boiling water.

ALL LIKE A CRIME

It was all so very business-like that one watched it fascinated. A hog was speared by machinery, pork-making by applied mathematics. And yet somehow the gruesome fact-of-fact person could not help thinking of the hogs themselves, that they came so very trustingly; and they were so very human in their protests—and we perfectly within their rights!

They had done nothing to deserve it, and it was adding insult to injury, as the thing was done here, dragging them up in this cold-blooded, impersonal way, without a pretence at apology, without the homage of a tear. Now and then a visitor wept, to be sure; but this slaughtering-machine ran on, visitors or no visitors. It was like some horrible crime committed in a dungeon, all unseen and unheeded, buried out of sight and of hearing.

One could not stand and watch very long without becoming philosophical, without beginning to deal in generalities and similies, and to hear the hog-squeal of fate. That there was nowhere upon the earth, or above the earth, a heaven for hogs, where all pigs went when quited for all this suffering?

Each one of these hogs was a separate creature. Some were white hogs, some were black, some were brown, some were spotted, some were old, some were young; some were long and lean, some were supremely fat; each of them had an individuality of his own, a will of his own, a heart and a heart's desire; each was full of self-confidence, of self-importance, of a sense of dignity.

And trusting and strong in faith he had gone about his business, the while a black shadow hung over him, and a horrid fate waited in his pathway. Now suddenly it had swooped upon him, and had seized him by the leg.

Relentless, remorseless, it was; all his protests, his screams, were nothing to it. It did its cruel will upon him, as if his wishes, his feelings, had simply no existence at all; it cut his throat and watched him gasp out his life. And now was one to believe that there was nowhere a god of hogs, to whom this hog-personality was precious, to w.om these hog-agonies and agony had a meaning?

Who would take this hog into his arms and comfort him, reward him for his work well done, and show the pitiless world its sacrifice? Perhaps some glimpse of all this was in the thoughts of Jokubas Szeqvilas, as he turned to go on with the rest of the party and muttered: "Dieve—but I'm glad I'm not a hog!"

INSPECTION IS EASY.

The carcass hog was scooped out of the vat by machinery, and then it fell to the second floor, passing on the way through a wonderful machine with numerous scrapers, which adjusted themselves to the size and shape of the animal, and scraped off the bristles, one after another, as it went by.

It was then again strung up by machinery, and sent upon another trolley ride; this time passing between two lines of men, who sat upon a raised platform, each doing a certain single thing to the carcass as it came to him. One scraped the outside fat; another scraped the inside of the same leg; the next with a single stroke cut the tendon; another with two swift strokes severed the hock, which fell to the floor and vanished through a hole. Another made a slit down the body; a second opened the body wider; a third with a saw cut the breast bone; a fourth loosened the entrails; a fifth pulled them out—and they also slid through a hole in the floor.

There were men to scrape each side and men to scrape the back; there were men to clean the carcass inside, to trim it and wash it. Looking down this room one saw, creeping slowly, a line of dangling hogs a hundred yards in length; and for every yard there was a man, working as if a demon were after him. At the end of this hog's progress every inch of the carcass had been gone over several times; and then it was rolled into the chilling room, where it stayed for twenty-four hours, and where a stranger might lose himself in a forest of freezing hogs.

SPOILED MEAT DOCTORED

Before the carcass was admitted here, however, it had to pass a government inspector, who sat in the doorway and felt of the glands in the neck for tuberculosis. This government inspector was on hand in the manner of a man who was worked to death; he was overworked, and he had not a fear that the hog might get by him before he had finished his testing.

If you were a sociable person he was quite willing to enter into conversation with you, and to explain to you the deadly nature of the ptomaines which are found in tubercular pork; and while he was talking with you you could hardly be so ungrateful as to notice that a dozen carcasses were passing him unnoticed.

This inspector wore a blue uniform, with brass buttons, and he gave an atmosphere of authority to the scene, and, as it were, put the stamp of official approval upon the things which were done in Durham's.

Jurgis went down the line with the rest of the visitors, staring open-mouthed, lost in wonder. He had dressed hogs himself in the forest of Lithuania; but he had never expected to live to see one hog dressed by several hundred men. It was like a wonderful poem to him, and he took it all in guilelessly—even to the conspicuous signs demanding immaculate cleanliness of the employes.

Jurgis was vexed when the cynical Jokubas translated these signs with sarcastic comments, offering to take them to the newest room where the spoiled meats were to be doctored.

GIRL ACCUSED OF THEFT IS ADOPTED IN COURT

CHILD FREED IN COURT; ADOPTED MOTHER.

Lynn Judge Believed Little Annie Overdunker's Statement That She Did Not Steal.

LYNN, June 7.—In the pretty blue eyes of fourteen-year-old Annie Overdunker, when she was brought before Judge Berry in the Police Court yesterday, was an appeal that the justice could not resist. The police said that Annie had stolen a watch from a neighbor. Passionately the child denied the intent to steal. Her story convinced the judge.

Now, instead of going to a reformatory, Annie is to be the adopted daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. Clough, who are well enough provided with the world's goods to give her a home that will be the envy of many another girl. Miss Annie does not have had the home if the police hadn't arrested her.

Another mother is dead. Her father, John Overdunker, who lives at No. 55 Sunnyside avenue, Hyde Park, married again. Annie left her home and came to Lynn.

Before her mother's death a gold watch was stolen from the Hyde Park home. It was the latest Christmas present, and the child grieved over its loss. She saw a watch in Lynn that looked like the one that had been stolen from her mother and she took it. Her mother told her the watch and she realized that it could not have been her mother's. Afraid to return it to the house from which she had taken it, the girl threw it over the fence next door.

That was the story that she told Judge Berry. She looked straight at His Honor when she related the facts. Judge Berry talked with the police. They had a story to tell fast wasn't quite like the child's. Then the judge took Annie into the jury room and made up his mind.

"I shall send you home today," he said. "This is her first time in court. She does not impress me as being willfully dishonest. Then it was that Mrs. Clough, with an exclamation of her own, came forward and said that she would like to give Annie a home. John Overdunker consented, and Judge Berry urged the child to accept the offer.

"Annie will be cared for as if she were my own," says Mrs. Clough. "She will have every chance to grow up a good woman. She has not yet had a chance to show her real worth."

CHILD AFTER ICE KILLED BY WHEELS

THE GREAT AUTO CHASE

CHAPTER LIV.
The Escape

CULBERSON drew away a little from Morgan and there was a touch of defiance in his manner.

"The Green Blaze," repeated Culberson. "I know nothing about it."

"That's a lie," declared Morgan, fiercely. "You tried to steal it once from me and failed, but we knew the second time was more successful."

"You had better ask Edward West about the jewels," said Culberson. "The last time I saw it was in his pocket."

"Placed there by you for the purpose of deserting Margaret Taylor," interrupted Ballara. "The poor girl told me all the story of your cruel deception in the house at the Barnes."

"That this is one of the scoundrels who dragged me from my automobile, exclaimed West, savagely, springing for ward.

"Stand back, West," said Culberson. "Don't make a fool of yourself."

"Yes, Edward," added Morgan, grimly. "Please stand back. This is my job. And besides you are not strong enough yet. I'll just turn this scoundrel upside down and see if I can shake 'The Green Blaze' out of him."

The giant thrust West aside and sprang at Culberson, but Ballara interposed.

"No, no, father," she pleaded. "I know you to be strong, but not as the man is, he is not worth staining your soul with blood."

Startling like an animal at bay, Culberson turned upon her, and, raising a clenched hand, struck her senseless at her father's feet. He was just about to make a dash for freedom when Hammond, stretching out a steel-like arm, seized him by the collar and dragged him into the vestry, locking the door in the face of the astonished group.

"Beat it for the auto," instructed Hammond.

Quickly realizing the situation, Culberson dashed down the steps, followed by Hammond, but another Baltar that were in the car and moving off. They were only a hundred feet or so away when Joe Morgan and West rushed out of the chapel.

Both West and Morgan saw the futility of chasing the automobile on foot, but the boy, Swipes, immediately sprang to the front.

"Come along after them, Mr. Morgan," he panted excitedly. "Come on, let's catch 'em. They can't go far, for I've cut the tires."

By this time the car had traveled a considerable distance, but, inspired by the speech of the boy, the three started after it but foot, leaving Ballara in the care of the clergyman, who had been too astonished to speak.

With the fear of Joe Morgan's vengeance hanging over him, Culberson drove the car with more than its usual reckless speed. Reaching the top of a hill he looked back and saw his pursuers far in the rear, the three figures panting after him.

"They're coming along," said Hammond. "There's been just about enough foolishness for one day.

"They're fools to think they can catch me in this car," muttered Culberson.

"Seems to me," declared Hammond, with his quiet gentleness, "you're a fool to talk so wobbly, Bielle! What's this? There's a little gate, and by George I'm going through. Then ain't such idiots as we take 'em for—on cut the fences."

LABOR NEWS

UNION PRINTERS TRADES UNION LABOR COUNCIL BOSTON, MASS. 96

Ten of the twenty ventilation men who struck the firm of Bradlee & Chapman on Beverly street for a minimum wage of $2.00 a day have been hired by other firms in the city, it was reported at last night's meeting of the executive board of Sheet Metal Workers' Union No. 11. Five firms have applied for the services of the men who struck. It was said, owing to their superior knowledge of ventilation. The strikers did the work on the new Harvard Medical School, which is regarded as the finest system of ventilation in the country by the visiting physicians. While the men ask for $2.50 as a minimum day's wage, it is asserted that similar workers in other cities throughout the country receive from $4 to $5 a day.

ELECTRICAL WO'KERS AID.

Twenty-five dollars was donated the striking electrical workers of Providence by Local No. 103 of Boston at last night's meeting. Nomination of officers was begun and will be continued at the next meeting, July night's meeting, when the question of locating Labor Hall will also be considered.

BUILDING TRADES TO MEET.

The Central Labor Union committee of twenty-five on the building trades section met last night and decided to hold a meeting of representatives of all organizations in the building industry June 20 at Wells Memorial Hall. The secretary was instructed to send notices with credentials to every union.

PATTERN MAKERS.

Business Agent F. M. Lent, M. K. Harris, ex-President R. C. Foley, Secretary Fred Lentz and A. H. Rose addressed Pattern Makers' Association on the request of the latter to Worcester last Sunday to organize a local there. They were successful and made over fifty men in that city next Tuesday. The office of the Pattern Makers' Association at No. 2 Washington street will be closed at 3 o'clock Saturday afternoons until September 1.

LABOR NOTES

Coppersmiths' Union No. 32 was addressed last night by Fred W. Mansfield of the People's Legal Security Company. Officers will be nominated at the next meeting.

The members of Hardwood Finishers' Union on strike, against whom an injunction has been issued, were cautioned at last night's meeting against any infringement of the law. A picnic has will be held June 15 at No. 45 Eliot street.

The Hotel Pantry Union will hereafter meet on the second and fourth Tuesday nights.

Barbers' Union has chosen Christopher Maller, Charles E. O'Donnell, J. F. Donovan, John P. O'Brien and J. J. Darcy as delegates to the Trades Council of the craft, which will be held in Faneuil Hall Sunday, October 7.

Mercantile Engineers' Union No. 263 will be represented by William Bent, Thomas Cleaton and William H. Bennett as delegates to the State Federation of Labor convention to be held in Fitchburg next Sunday. The alternates chosen are William Bent, Thomas Cleaton and Robert Cronin.

A committee from the Central Labor Union will call on Mayor Moody relative to the Labor Day parade. Leaders Union No. 97 of their meetings next Labor Day and urge both bodies to take part in the Labor Day parade. The committee is composed of D. B. Driscoll, John E. Potts and Henry Abrahams.

William Connell and Joseph Doyle have been elected delegates of the stone-liner board of Bookbinders' Union.

FASTEST LINER IS LAUNCHED

CLYDEBANK, Scotland, June 7.—The new transatlantic flyer Lusitania of the Cunard line was successfully launched here to-day. A large crowd was present to celebrate the event.

The Lusitania will be the largest and fastest steamer afloat. She is of 32,000 tons and is 785 feet in length. She has quadruple screws, turbine engines capable of developing 68,000 horse power and making 25 knots an hour.

The vessel has accommodations for 550 first-class passengers, 500 second-class, and 1,900 third class, and a crew of 850 and 300 mess men. Some idea of the amount of work and material involved may be gained when it is stated that there are 40,000 rivets in the hull.

For the third time to-day the Tenneyites will go up against that Pirate crew, but it looks like a repetition of the other two contests, as the locals are out for that record of defeats, and have already been dumped eighteen times.

It is decided that Bridwell gets in the game to-day, which means a shifting of the players, and considerably lessens the chances of the team seeing out the warm-ing Pirates on the slimk.

Tenney has got only two twirlers to present, either Pfeffer or Wiltsching the new recruit, and it looks as if the latter would be given an opportunity to make his debut.

Deacon Phillippi or Mike Lynch will de-cide between them who will do the box stunt for the Westerners.

"Little Cy" Young was unable to hold the fort against the Pirates, but the real feature of the game was the slinging of Leifield, one of the latest additions to the Pirates' ranks. His south side delivery completely fooled the locals batters, and only one clean hit was recorded against him. The youngster certainly made good and got all the bouquets.

Only seven Tenneyites got to the bas-and four of these came from passes. Only once was the second bag reached, and that was in the last inning.

The Pirates could not drive Young out of the box with seven bingles, but the ragged fielding aided in the run getting.

CASTLE DIDN'T ALLOW BROWN NINE A HIT

Harvard scored sweet revenge over the Brown baseball nine at Soldiers Field yes-terday, when the Providence collegians went down to defeat, 1 to 0. The first game between the teams, which was played at Providence, was won by Brown, 6 to 5.

To Castle alone does Harvard owe her victory, as he didn't allow his rivals a hit, and not only that, but he made the only run this game by his side, one of which was responsible for Harvard's tally.

Castle made a scratch hit off Tift's de-livery in the sixth, went to second on Harvey Cleaves' sacrifice and scored on Reid's error. Stephenson forced Harvey. Castle going to third. Steve drew a wild throw to second, permitting Castle to score.

M'LEAN TO BE SCRATCH MAN

Hughey MacLean, one of the greatest bicycle riders in the world, will be scratch man in the big handicap event at Revere Saturday night. He will concede five laps or over a half mile to Bill Stinson, and a mile to Elmer Collins of Lynn. He will make his real debut as a professional pace follower. In order to win MacLean will be obliged to lap Collins eight times and to beat Stinson, must circle the Cambridge man five times.

That means racing from the very start through to the end of the full distance, twenty-five miles.

The tandem paced race between Patsey Logan and Dennis Connolly also promises to be hot stuff. Logan and Connolly are old rivals and made a great race against each other on Memorial Day. In addition there will be two good events for the amateurs, for which a big entry list is

DICK HYLAND SKIPPED; NO CHELSEA BOUT

There will be no glove contest at Chel-sea to-night, owing to the fact that Dick Hyland and his manager, Sammy McGin-nis, suddenly left their training quarters at Highland Lake yesterday for New York, without advising anyone of their intentions.

Alec Gregoire, who came East with Hyland and his manager, was duped by the pair, who sent Gregoire into the city to make arrangements about the referee, and as soon as Alec started for Boston Hyland started for New York.

There is no apparent reason for Hy-land's cool quit except that at the last moment he became afraid of Goodman, thought he was due for defeat, and avoid-ed it by suddenly leaving town. Mike Devenny, at whose place he was training, tried to get some tangible reason from Hyland, but his every movement indicated that the reports that he had heard of Goodman's grand condition simply scared the San Francisco boy, and he left town hurriedly to avoid a defeat.

Mish Murray, who is now managing the Lincoln club, stated last evening: "I found this match arranged when I became manager, and I did not care about it, as I desired to have the exhibitions arranged properly before seeking the support of those who love good boxing. This fight of Hyland's will give me a chance to thor-oughly renovate the club, and when it is satisfactorily arranged then I will put on cards which will duplicate the bouts which pleased so many at the old Criterion Club. I am glad that Hyland quit early enough so that the members will not be disap-pointed at the last moment."

NEW ROUTE WILL BE CHOSEN FOR BIG VANDERBILT CUP ROAD RACE

By J. C. KERRISON

A trolley car company has invaded a portion of the course for the Vanderbilt road race, and the commission in charge of the race is now looking for a new course.

The entire stretch of roadway between New Hyde Park and Mineola will be ruined for racing purposes. The laying of the track leaves too little room to permit the speed-ing of cars, and especially if one car tries to pass another. The residents of Nassau County have always been more or less op-posed to the race since its inaugural, that, too, despite the fact that it has brought thousands and thousands of dollars to the county.

Experts say that the Jerico Pike, with a trolley line running along one side, will be entirely too narrow for racing purposes. Although Long Island has gained consider-able by the laying of the trolley lines, it has likewise lost considerable prestige in the world at large. Of course there is no earthly reason why the inhabitants of a town or county should give up the pleasures and conveniences of a trolley line just to permit a lot of men to drive cars at break-neck pace. However, there are other roads and courses which can be selected to meet the demands and requirements of the Van-derbilt race. This international contest will by no means be abandoned on account of the change in the roads near Mineola. Although the rules and conditions of the cilliden tour have not been definitely an-nounced there is reason to believe that sev-eral Bostonians will participate therein, and that the colors of the Bay State Automobile Association will be carried by more than one car. President Spears of the local association will enter a car, as will also F. A. Gilmore, who had year ending a first class certificate with his Rambler. J. Frank Du Pont will send along a couple of White steamers, and J. H. MacAlaun will be in it that there are several Oldsmobile cars entered. Ralph Coburn is to drive a Maxwell.

The big four cylinder Cadillac arrived in town yesterday. It is attracting con-siderable attention, and Alvan T. Fuller is correspondingly happy. Motor Mart is correspondingly happy. This car, which proved one of the big things at the New York show, gives every indication of being a more successful mo-tor vehicle than was its predecessor of a year ago, which went through the Glidden tour with a great deal of hard work and such thorough success. The car is the product of the same firm which has turned out that popular and successful one-cylin-der Cadillac, and embraces all the fine points of a thoroughly up-to-date machine.

This car is 20-25 horse power, listing at $2,500. Its most prominent features, which will be appreciated by the autoists of the public, are its effective marine gov-ernor, its planetary transmission, its en-closed motor and control and all the other features of the mechanical construction, including the three bright bearings from start to finish, which have sustained the world-wide reputation of the Cadillac.

The Flat Junior, the machine with which Collins has done some great track and road work, is now on exhibition in the salesrooms of the Henry Fosdick Co. in the Motor Mart. The good car shows signs of the great work she has accomplished in the past, and as proven by her work at Readville last week she has still many good fast miles left in her. The Flat Junior has proven in more contests than any other machine on the track or road to-day. She has competed in many of the big events in Europe, and during the past two years has been a prominent factor in American motor-ing.

GIANTS PLAYING IN HARD LUCK SAYS PIRATE CLARKE

At daylight this morning a strange motor propelled car put out from the ocean side of Winthrop. In the dim light Gertrude Ederle discerned seated on the thwarts. They were muttering and grosn-ing and in general making all kinds of a noise. Many a mutttered Great was heard by the palsma-clad spectators watching the movements of this strange launch from win-dows along tocean avenue. When the craft was out of sight stifled screams from the feminine onlookers announced the fact that they had learned of the narrow escape Win-throp has had. There persons were pirates —regular house-broken-dressed up and per-fumed pirates. Bloodcurdly ones. Men who eat anything—very fond of children also—and proprietors along the shore hailed the advent of a fresh departure in adver-tising with glee and guests. There hasn't been a sea serpent at Winthrop for years, but real pirates? a novel attraction.

These Pirates come from Pittsburg.

For the past two mornings they have been get-ting up with the birds and imitating Cleo-selves into the mysteries of deep-sea fishing. They simply beat Tenney's men at the Sound-ing grounds in the afternoon, return to the hotel for supper, go to bed, get up and fish and then beat Tenney's men again. They have been catching devil fish for two mornings, "hell fish" they call them as their salt-water instructor only mentioned the name once.

The BOSTON AMERICAN man found them outside of Boston Light, pitching and tossing some holding lines in the watch-ers, heavy grasping the dwarfs with both hands. The latter would remind one of the sign reading, "Anchors outside." Fred Clarke, however, sitting in the bow like an old salt, looked fine and healthy. The pullman craft didn't faize him. He was improving the opportunity of telling his charges how nice a white champion-ship pennant would look suspended from the cuff of one lucky Pittsburg gunman. Mordecai has been driving long enough to know what he was saying. "You fel-lows are here now, resting up for a week, getting regular meals all day and practice in the afternoon and shunning the temptations of the city. We'll soon be on our way to Philadelphia and you can't have any more feeding—I'm a judge of grub myself—and had tried to look happy. You'll have plenty of ball, though, for the Philly team is right after us."

As the AMERICAN'S host approached he turned to the man with the pad and pen-cil. That New York crowd is a wonder-ful ball club, certainly, but they are playing in hard luck. Of course, that makes it less gratifying for us to have to take the games away from them so easy, but if can be readily seen that we would do it to anyone this year. That three straight in the New York league are no champion-ship aspirations and turned the red fire loose. We are in here for all it's worth, whether we win or lose we have the sat-isfaction of knowing that we couldn't do any better. Lindeneeau is an unknown quantity to the Pittsburgs as he has had few such games and recognize no series. It's the game to-day and not to-morrow with us.

I can't say anything about the first three games in Chicago. We played good ball so in New York. We play the best we know how and we hope to come out on top. "Get a going" is our motto do that in the first inning, and the game is half won.

"Why is it so few new men break into the major leagues? Well, the old men are playing harder each year to hold their places. As they get seasoned they get more clever, more dangerous and consequ-ently find it difficult to get admitted because we have to make all that they have learned, and then we have to build them over again. We haven't time for that these days. No, sir, unless he meets with in-juries, the seasoned veteran be the man for the place. It isn't because the old fellows don't grow stale and bends that one sees so few youngsters in the game, but because they don't know baseball as it ap-pears to the player. What the fans see is a different game."

"The greatest ball player in the world," Hans Wagner, by all means. Can you point out a man that can run, field and use his head like Honus? There's no other player like him. Wagner has many years, barring injury, to play ball. He's the man with the clear head and knows more baseball than has ever been pub-lished. I can't see where there is a man to compare him with. He's alone and on a pedestal. He is a specialist in any posi-tion and is America's greatest."

SCOTCH PICNIC BIG GAMES

The Scotch picnic will be held on Sat-urday, August 4, at Caledonian Grove, West Roxbury. This is the fifty-second annual renewal of the great professional athletic meet. The committee in charge, headed by Chief James Allan, Biggs and Fourth Chieftain Thomas Griffin, an-nounces that in addition to the regular list of events which will attract all first rate athletes, there will be several novel features. One will be a big wrest-ling match at the catch-as-catch-can style between two stars of national reputation, and a quoit throwing contest for the na-tional individual championship. The com-mittee will also hold amateur events, mak-ing a departure in this line. The Scotch picnic is always looked forward to by the sporting public, and they will be glad to hear that the date has been made so that one entry may be made in the diary, the 100 yard dash handicap will be a big affair and the Scottish race will, as usual, attract all the fast professional distance runners in the East.

Woman Sheds New Light on Question Why Men Don't Wed

By Beatrice Fairfax

NEW ENGLAND women are taking keenest interest in this absorbing question. "Why Men Don't Marry." Both sides are being discussed from many different standpoints, and both bachelors and maids are well sustaining the two sides of the argument.

The first letter printed below, although somewhat long, is quoted in full because it abounds in sane, sensible common sense views of the question. It is a review of practical experience rather than a discussion of intangible opinions.

Of the hundreds of letters in this morning's mail, I have selected this letter as presenting a view of married life which has not been exploited since this discussion started. The writer is, perhaps, a bit prejudiced, but the letter is well worth careful reading by every unmarried man and woman in New England. It appeals to me as a powerful sermon from practical experience.

Happily Wed Herself

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

In reading the girls' answers to "Why Don't Men Marry?" I will say at the first, that I am talking from no one experience and or others that I know. I am speaking of the average man and woman.

Nowadays, young girls are brought up without learning how to sew, cook or scrub, and girls hate housework and abhor sewing. A man goes with a girl that has dressed expensively, he admires her, but if he were to pay for the apparel it would be a different thing. The average man doesn't make $20 a week, unless he has a profession, and the wife helps spend it as fast as he earns it. He wants a helpmate, not a spendthrift.

A girl thinks if a man makes $15 or $17 a week she will live in poverty. That is all imaginary. Buckle down, girls, and see what you could do on it. I have been married three years, and my husband only makes $15 a week, and we have a nice cozy home in a good neighborhood, have no eight-room house, but a four-room place, have a two-year-old baby, save $5 to $7 a month, dress well and don't live in poverty by any means. We don't owe a single cent. I do my own work, sewing, except big suits, and also take music lessons and have had tremendous doctor's bills.

Girls don't think anything of paying $10 for a hat or $20 for a suit. Do you wonder that a man don't marry when a woman pays such outrageous prices for things. If a girl does it before marriage, she will do it after.

Girls, don't think because you marry that you will be better off than before. Learn how to do housework, sew and try and dress also, have things of good quality, but not too many, and be moderate in your wants before and after marriage, and a fellow will love you tenfold more than he did. I don't believe in a man marrying if he can't support a wife, but living in poverty on $15 a week is all nonsense. Don't want to scare you, but I will pick up for the men on this. Girls, study yourselves and see if you haven't the one weak point. A READER.

Pawtucket, R. I.

Circumstances Alter Cases

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Your articles entitled, "Young Men Get Married," is certainly interesting. I am a young man, aged twenty-seven, and earning from $23 to $28 per week, and still do not see my way clear for marriage.

The girls of to-day expect too much in the way of clothes and high living. How about a young man who is duty bound to support his widowed mother? Shall he forget her and marry? I understand, with prices that are soaring upward in rentals and living expenses, a man cannot support two homes. I sincerely believe that one who is not able to support a wife respectably should not marry.

DANIEL FELSTER

Woman's Extravagance

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Being a bachelor, it would not be fair for me to keep quiet after your challenge. It is very easy for you to say, "Get married."

At the present time, with the Sugar Trust is squeezing and the Gas Trust doing the same, how can girls with their high notions of maids and chambermaids and butlers, not even mentioning their extravagance in dress as to everything else, to meet such extravagant ideas a man nowadays must be well prepared, and I am sure $15 per week is hardly sufficient to fortify him against such obstacles.

I have not mentioned such items as rent, food, living expenses. I think I am much better off single at present.

A BACHELOR.

Admires Feminine Women

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

While reading the marriage question in to-day's issue of the AMERICAN I noticed the article written by a Mr. H. and would say that if there were more girls like her there would be fewer bachelors, and although not a prophet I predict for her a happy future with a good home and a loving husband. I am a professional man, in my thirties, a recent graduate and worked hard for the degree I now hold, and will say right here that I would forsake the realms of bachelorhood, have no order providing I met a girl like E. H. and would also add that I know scores of young men who are in the same frame of mind. But the trouble is there are, or seem to be, so few girls who are willing to assist in building up a home that young men prefer to remain bachelors rather than shoulder the whole responsibility.

ADMIRER OF FEMININE WOMEN.

Boston.

From a Foreigner

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Young men, get married," has been quite a problem for young people. I am a sister to eight brothers, three of them are married, and I regret that day as well as they do themselves. American girls are lovely girls and the country ought to be proud of them. They say they can do housekeeping. Yes? My poor brothers work from early morn until late at night, and when they come home the beds, the breakfast dishes, as well as hats and shoes stand around. They themselves are very fussy about their dress, they must wear silk skirts and big feather hats, but the house I'll clean to-morrow. That's the kind of girls American owns. My advice is, young men stay single until you find the right girl. GERMANY.

So Generous!

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a bachelor, thirty five years old; and receive a salary of $2,000 a year. I have a fair education, an sober and industrious, I think, however, my one great fault is a too generous. My friends say I am very. I like good clothes and entertainment. Young people as a rule, get married too young. A young man should wait until he is at least fifty years old, and a young woman twenty-five. I think "Happy Maid" is a little severe in her bachelor views. We may have our faults. I would not deprive a lady of his cigars and his occasional glass of his beer or whiskey, providing he could go home so far. Some have all the habits she mentions, and yet be true men. Everything I do does not count so much, seemingly, as money, for the only regret I have is that I am not a millionaire. In conclusion, let me say to all the young ladies who are ambitious and want good husbands, stand out for what you think is right and stick to it, but don't be too hard on us bachelors. M. L. B.

VOILE STREET GOWN FOR HOT WEATHER

Is the Club a Blessing or Does It Destroy the Home?

Men and Women Differ Widely in Views of the Uses and Abuses of the Man's Evening Passed at the Club

THE MAN'S VIEW

A CLUB is a necessity to the poor lone bachelor and it is by way of being a great convenience to the married man as well.

If it was not for my club I should be the poorer to-day by not having the friendship of half a dozen of the best of good fellows, and a pleasant acquaintance with at least three score others.

If it were not for my club where should I be able to collect that light and well-cooked lunch, that cosy and inexpensive dinner? Where should I spend my evenings, particularly Winter evenings?

Of course, a married man has his house and his wife, but I've heard it whispered that even the most happily married of my sex is the better in every way for an evening spent in the society of his fellows. Sometimes, when a man's marriage has turned out badly, he thanks heaven for his club.

The Cheapness of It

To him and his kind the club is a heaven-sent invention. At a club a man can, for three shillings or less, at an absurdly small yearly payment, obtain the service of a body of well-trained servants, the run of a number of rooms furnished in a style he, in most cases, could not possibly afford, the use of billiard table and card table appointed in the best possible manner, and is enabled to select his own personal reading matter from a stock which has been chosen to suit all shades and kinds of taste.

In a club one is one's own master absolutely. If a man desires quiet he can have it in his club, for are there not rooms in which no voice is raised above an undertone? If he desires laughter and the sound of voices, are there not rooms where many groups meet to chat, laugh and jest?

Can a man hope for such good times anywhere but at his club?

Free from Worries

No domestic troubles are allowed to intrude into a club. The only time when the domestic arrangements of the club are disturbed is when it is necessary to obtain the consent of the members to, on the occasion when the building is turned out for cleaning. This is always done when most of the members are out of town, and an invitation to such members as may still be in their old haunts is always issued by a neighboring club.

Women are not admitted as a body dead against clubs. But it is they themselves who drive men to the shelter of the clubs by their utter lack of sympathy with a man's need. Some women think that because as a general rule women are not allowed in club buildings, the members must be reprobates of the very blackest dye.

THE WOMAN'S VIEW

WHAT a man wants to belong to a club for I can't think.

There can't be very much fun in sitting in big armchairs and reading papers all the evening, gambling on cards and billiard playing, which is the curse of club life, must get tiresome after a while.

Clubs make men selfish and altogether detestable.

That is easy to say, isn't it? But it is just as easy to prove.

Eaten with Selfishness

When a man belongs to a club he does not consider anybody except himself. And he does not have to do anything for himself, either.

He becomes so eaten up with his own importance that he wants waiting on hand and foot, and never considers his servants or his people or anybody. Other folk he treats as dirt beneath his feet.

But that is not the worst by a long way.

Clubs are very luxurious; more luxurious than most of the members' homes. That is the reason why so many young fellows don't marry nowadays.

Why should a man marry when by belonging to a club he can get nearly all the comforts of a home without any of the worries?

That is one of the reasons why I think clubs are a danger to the country. What would the men think if the majority of womankind herded together and refused to have anything to do with the opposite sex?

Encourage Extravagance

Clubs teach men to be extravagant, too. Why, I've heard that men pay perfectly awful sums for wine in their clubs, and they spend many a dollar playing billiards.

Then there is a most serious thing.

Suppose a man who is a member of a club does marry! He is or so used to spending his evenings there that after a few months of married life he resumes his old habits.

This would not be so bad—though it is very hard that his poor wife should be left alone—but that once he gets inside the club the man is apt to think himself a bachelor again and spend money on his own enjoyment that he ought by right to be spending in his home.

I consider clubs the curse of married life. They make the man a selfish machine, with but one end in view—enjoyment. He loses all home ties; all interest in his family and home is lost; he lives for himself, and those of his own family circle can get on as best they may.

Good Ways to Serve Tomatoes

HERE are a few recipes which may be useful to the housekeeper.

To prepare tomatoes raw, carefully remove the skins by pouring over the tomatoes scalding water. Allow them to stand in it for a few seconds, then quickly pour it off and run them under the cold tap. Slice them and sprinkle with salt.

They may be served with a mayonnaise dressing or eaten with pepper, salt and vinegar.

Broiled Tomatoes

Cut firm, large, ripe tomatoes into thick slices. Season with salt and pepper, dredge well with flour or roll in egg and bread crumbs and fry them brown on both sides in hot butter until well heated. These are delicious served with beefsteak.

Stuffed Tomatoes

From the blossom end of a dozen tomatoes—smooth, ripe and solid—cut a thin slice. Scoop out the pulp without breaking the rind surrounding it, and put it in a saucepan with a good-sized onion finely and mix them with fine bread crumbs and the pulp; season with salt and sugar and add a cup of sweet cream; when all is well mixed put the tomatoes in the shells, replace the slices and place the tomatoes in a buttered baking dish, set aside in a cool place. Put just enough water to keep from burning; then put a little butter on each tomato and bake half an hour or so, till well done, basting often with the juice and serve in same dish. Very fine.

Another stuffing which is considered quite fine is to cut a slice from the stem of each and scoop out the soft pulp.

Mince one small onion and fry it slightly; add a gill of hot water, the tomato pulp and two ounces of cold veal or chicken chopped fine; simmer slowly and season with salt and pepper.

Stir into the whole a cracker dust or bread crumbs enough to absorb the moisture; take off from the fire and let it cool; stuff the tomatoes with this mass, sprinkle dry crumbs over the top and add a small piece of butter to the top of each and bake until slightly browned on top.

Scalloped Tomatoes

Butter the sides and bottom of a pudding dish. Put a layer of bread crumbs in the bottom; on them put a layer of sliced tomatoes; sprinkle on salt, pepper and some bits of butter, and a very little white sugar. Then repeat with another layer of crumbs, another of tomato and seasoning until full, having the top layer of slices of tomato with bits of butter on each.

Bake covered until well cooked through; remove the cover and brown quickly.

DON'T LET YOURSELF WORRY

DIFFUSE happiness and you will find it.

Learn to take things as they are marked on the calendar of life. Remember that it is not to-morrow that you will live, but that it is to-day you are living. Don't grumble, don't worry—just do the very best you can. It is sweet thoughts and good deeds that keep youth always with you.

It is in saying pleasant things, in thinking them, in living them. The woman who is selfish, suspicious and of small mind shows it in her face. To be kind and sweet and considerate, and above all to be unselfish, is best, for it is in these things that one finds the only real rewards for all the cares, worries, tired nerves and heavy, weary spirits existence usually imposes upon people.

Be very patient with the faults and failings of others. Wait patiently until the clouds lift, and do your work in the meantime, cultivate the unselfish giving spirit; there is nothing like it. Under its helpful, soothing influence the weary old world trouble seems in easier and a brighter road to face.

"SHADOWS OF NEW YORK"

Copyright, 1901, by American Journal Examiner.

"HOW do you do, my dear?" greeted Miss Handford, as Rosamund. "Isn't it a perfectly delightful day for the fete! How charming you are looking this morning—after such ec—iate hours!" with her rather shrill, artless laugh that Rosamund loathed as much as Molly. "I suppose we shall be hearing some news soon, Rosamund!"

"News?"

"Don't pretend to misunderstand me, my dear, and look so innocent!" prattled Miss Handford, who enjoyed a well-earned reputation for being the keenest gossip for miles around. "Is it indiscreet for me to ask if the happy day is fixed?" smiling expansively, while Rosamund's manner grew more frigid.

I really can't know in the least what you are talking about, Miss Handford," she said.

"Oh, what a little Miss Innocence we are this morning, my dear!" cried Miss Handford, shaking a waggish forefinger. "But, you see, the secret has leaked out—it's all over the village, in fact, this morning—about the lady whom Mr. Herries likes to take on moonlight drives in his motor car. Of course, my love, the lady—I mention no names!—disguised her charming face by those hideous motoring goggles; but Mr. Herries's manner toward his fair companion told its own tale—he really was so—so very—what shall I say? —but you know what I mean, my dear."

Rosamund's face was a little more set and hard.

Here was an explanation why John Herries had gone out in his motor car so late last night. "I understand," she whispered to herself.

"Oh, Mr. Herries's manner to the lady whom he was driving was positively marvelous, Miss Handford prattled on archly. "He would not have been so attentive to poor little me, for instance. If I had been his companion. One must blame Mr. Herries that the—shall we say?—fair unknown's identity has leaked out; he was really so—so—you know what I mean, my dear."

"But if you are anxious to discover who the lady with him was, why not ask Mr. Herries himself?"

"My dear Rosamund! As if I could ask Mr. Herries such a question!" Miss Handford appeared quite shocked.

"Because," continued Rosamund, "I am afraid, even if it were any business of mine, that I could not gratify your curiosity. I have no idea who Mr. Herries's companion was."

Miss Handford stared at her incredulously.

Stinging Words

"You have no idea?" she gasped. Then she cried shrilly: "Then—then it wasn't you who accompanied Mr. Herries last night? Who could it have been? Why, it's half over the town that you and he—"

"That rather sounds, Miss Handford, as though you had been discussing it with half the town, doesn't it?" asked Rosamund, coolly.

She disliked Miss Handford, and this interesting scandal monger's insinuations, her indisputably curiously manner in the affair of her patience.

"I am sorry to disappoint you, but I can assure you that it was not I—" she began, then suddenly paused. For Miss Handford had pounced on archly. "He would not have been so attentive to poor little me, for instance. If I had been his companion. One must blame Mr. Herries that the—shall we say?—fair unknown's identity has leaked out; he was really so—so—you know what I mean, my dear."

"But if you are anxious to discover who the lady with him was, why not ask Mr. Herries himself?"

The Railroads vs. the People of Massachusetts

To Which Will the State's Law-makers Give Allegiance?

The Massachusetts Legislature has before it for early action an act popularly known as the "merger bill." It is a bill to allow steam railroads to purchase street railways. To be exact, it is the beginning of a plan to form a gigantic trust, which shall control all the transportation facilities of Massachusetts.

The public in sections of the State which have had an experience of the benefits of street railway competition with steam railroads will comprehend without elaborate argument that to allow the steam roads to buy up and control the source of their only competition will mean a check to progress in the improvement of service and the lowering of fares.

This is so clear that it seems rather strange that there should be serious-minded legislators who should argue to the opposite. It is, however, a fact that a considerable number of the Commonwealth's law-makers have argued that this act not only is not a bad thing for the State, but a positive benefit. A few of them, unfortunately, are men commonly reputed to be honest. The greater part, as would be expected, are those who are always to be found on the side of the great corporations when privileges for the Trusts conflict with the rights of the people.

The belief that the "merger bill" is the beginning of a plan to form a gigantic trust which shall control all the railway systems, steam and electric, in Massachusetts is not to be dismissed by railroad legislators by the airy statement that it is untrue, or that it has its foundation in the minds of deluded Socialists. The Massachusetts State Board of Trade, which has never been accused of being either socialistic or radical, has officially protested against the bill, and in a paragraph of its communication to Senators and Representatives has said:

"Later came the acquisition of the Fitchburg by the Boston & Maine, and the Boston & Albany by the New York Central Railroad, and now, with Connecticut, Rhode Island and a large portion of Massachusetts in the hands of New York capitalists having unlimited resources at command, what more tempting bait than the Boston & Maine Railroad system, and with it the control of the railroad transportation interests of New England, especially if with these could be secured the street railway transportation system as well?

"That the New York Central and New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad officials might well unite for such an end is evidenced by the fact that the Rockefeller, Vanderbilt and Morgan interests are represented in each of the directories of these roads; and that the Boston & Maine Railroad Company has already some New York men in its board of directors."

This protest from the State Board of Trade, which is signed by Edwin L. Sprague, chairman of the committee on transportation, and Loyed E. Chamberlain, chairman of the committee on State legislation, would naturally be expected to carry much weight with the legislators and the Governor. It would do so beyond question if the interests it opposed were of a different character from what they are. Unfortunately, it is very seldom that any legislation is enacted at the Massachusetts State House contrary to the wishes of the Boston & Maine railroad, and the powerful lobby of that corporation is working and has been working for a year to secure the passage of the merger act.

Not long ago the interests which want the bill were confronted by a serious difficulty. The Boston Elevated railroad began opposition to it, because it gave to a steam railroad a right it did not give to the Elevated. This made the passage of the bill practically impossible, because the Boston Elevated controls almost as many legislators as the Boston & Maine, the lobby of the big Boston traction trust is nearly as strong as that of the steam railroad, and if the Elevated should permanently oppose the bill the chance of its passage would be greatly lessened.

This difficulty has recently been removed in a most amicable manner. The interests back of the bill have agreed to allow a "joker" to be attached to it in the form of an amendment, introduced SINCE THE MEASURE CAME FROM THE COMMITTEES, giving street railways the same right to acquire other street railways that are given to railroads. In this form the scheme is agreeable to both the great corporations, and the two lobbies are united in agitating for the immediate passage of the act.

The Boston & Maine railroad had argued earnestly that it should be given the right to absorb street railways because the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, a Connecticut railroad, has taken the right. There seems to be little question that the New York, New Haven & Hartford has acted illegally. There can be NO question that the Legislature has the power to control the operations of foreign corporations within the Commonwealth.

The State Board of Trade has answered this argument clearly and conservatively thus:

"The Legislature of Massachusetts represents the people of Massachusetts, and it is respectfully submitted that, if an offence against the laws of the Commonwealth has been committed, especially in a matter of great and far-reaching consequences to the public, is it not a plain duty, instead of condoning and indorsing the offence, in behalf of and for the protection of the people, to require compliance with the laws that have been violated?"

There are many lesser objections to the bill, but important as they are, they sink into insignificance before the main point of the scheme—THAT THE ACT WILL DESTROY COMPETITION AND THE STIMULUS THAT COMPETITION GIVES TO TRANSPORTATION SERVICE. This is the purpose of the bill. This is what legislators who vote for it will record themselves as favoring.

Those who have observed the progress of vicious legislation in this and other States where there is a subservient Legislature have never failed to note this peculiar coincidence—if it IS a coincidence—that the WORST bills in some manner usually manage to arrive before the House and Senate during the closing days or hours of the session, when the legislators are weary, and the weather is warm, and everybody is tired and anxious to get home.

In this connection it is to be noted that not only is the merger bill now before the Beacon Hill statesmen, but another scandalous measure, a scheme of the Boston Elevated Railroad, is also being rushed through at high speed.

This is the bill entitled "An Act to authorize the Boston Elevated Company to construct subways or subway in the city of Cambridge and to provide for connection thereof with the railway system in the city of Boston." That is its official title, and, as official titles often are, is very misleading. The bill should be called:

"An act to authorize the Boston Elevated Company to steal $2,700,000 from the city of Cambridge, to give it an irrevocable franchise on the new Charles River dam, to authorize it to destroy property value to the extent of $1,657,746 in the city of Boston, and to forever prevent competition with the Boston Elevated road in the Northern Metropolitan District of Boston."

The bill as reported and voted upon in the House does ALL of these things.

It authorizes the building of a subway and provides that the Elevated, WHICH PAID NOTHING FOR ITS ELEVATED ROAD FRANCHISE, shall trade that for a subway franchise, shall occupy that subway rent free for twenty years, and shall then sell the subway to the city, if the city wants to buy, for $2,700,000 more than the original cost.

That the company is now given a franchise that can never be taken away has been clearly pointed out by President Pritchett of the Charles River Basin Commission.

But for the route over the Charles River dam, the Boston Elevated has the Northern Metropolitan District by the throat. By means of that dam, the State retained the right to allow competition if it seemed advisable. This act takes away this people's right and presents the Elevated with the right to sew up the city of Boston to the north, free from all possibility of competition.

The most wicked feature of the bill is the treatment it gives the city of Boston. It robs the city forever of vast property values. It fastens upon it an elevated road, privately owned, instead of a subway, municipally owned, which is Boston's present policy.

Thirty-eight holders of large properties, in the North End of the city, whose real estate holdings total $6,000,000, are among the thousands who oppose the bill. They urge the Legislature not to destroy their property.

It has been proved in Boston that an elevated railroad FOREVER DESTROYS property thirty-three and a third per cent., while a subway INCREASES the value of property at its entrances from two hundred to three hundred per cent.

Private property lying along the route of the proposed new piece of elevated track is valued at $3,000,000. The property of the Boston & Maine Railroad along the route is worth $3,500,000. Estimating the depreciation of the private property at thirty-three and a third per cent., there will be an irretrievable loss of $972,266. Estimating the damage to the railroad property at twenty per cent., there will be a loss of $685,480, a total of $1,657,746.

The estimated cost of the addition to the Elevated tracks is $225,000. The estimated cost of taking property is $125,000. This, added to the property loss, will make the total cost to all concerned of the elevated road $2,007,746.

It is estimated that to construct a subway a half-mile long, in place of an elevated structure, would cost $1,250,000.

THE DIFFERENCE—$757,746—IS THE COST OF THE BOSTON ELEVATED'S DETERMINATION TO OWN THIS SMALL PART OF ITS SYSTEM. It indicates how important the railroad company believes this little connecting link to be.

In fifty years the city will lose in taxes through this act $1,326,250. Hundreds of small real estate owners in the North End, whose houses are heavily mortgaged, will find their property absolutely wiped out, the depreciation having been more than their equities.

This is what the Cambridge Subway Bill will do—and more. It is surely a fitting bill to be considered by the legislators at the same time as the highly vicious "Merger" Bill, especially as, since the Elevated has been admitted to a share of the spoils in the one and the Boston & Maine has ceased to actively object to the other, you will probably find about the same men voting for both.

The issue in both of these acts is clear. It is the Railroads vs. The People of Massachusetts.

In the past the Legislature has shown an unfortunate tendency to legislate for the great corporations without much regard for the welfare of the public.

The next few days will show whether the railroads have the State's law-makers thoroughly tamed or there remain men of sufficient honesty and independence to speak, and work, and VOTE against these schemes.

She Tells Exactly What She Would Do if She Had John D. Rockefeller's Money at Her Command

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1906, by American Journal-Examiner.

SOME one asked me what I would do if I had the money of Mr. Rockefeller. This is what I think I would do. We never really know what we would do in another's place until we arrive there.

I would first of all establish a great scientific university for the development of children's minds, under the highest influences.

Dr. Elmer Gates of Chevy Chase and Luther Burbank of California should direct the college and engage their retinue of assistants.

This college should keep in touch with the National Children's Home Society of Sioux Falls, S. D., so that after the children reached a certain age the agents of that society could assist in placing orphans under right home conditions.

This home society would also be one of my avenues of financial usefulness, as I would increase their staff of agents and teachers.

I would endow my scientific college so that for at least two hundred years there could be no lack of funds for its thorough experiments in moral brain-building.

Then I would use my influence in the way of financial aid, to induce some well-known, prominent college to establish a department of systematic training for good parentage as a post-graduate course for both sexes.

The best physicians, the best psychologists and the best mental scientists should be paid good salaries to assist in this department.

Everything which could be proven in the line of the power of mental suggestion, as a creative or reformatory influence, should be taught the pupils, and the great need of co-operation of father and mother in giving the child good prenatal influence would be an important branch of study.

Great Possibilities.

PHYSICIANS of the regular school should show the results of heredity in children, and metaphysical teachers should show the power of the mind to overcome these tendencies, when undesirable, or to accentuate them when desirable.

The great advantage of giving a child the inheritance of good blood and good inclinations would be illustrated and the possibility of eliminating the opposite inheritance would be proven.

Then I would offer money prizes and other rewards to the young couples who were able to show diplomas from this course of study to the clergyman asked to perform the marriage ceremony.

After this it would be my object to arrange a fund for providing rewards of some desirable kind to be bestowed upon the parents producing the most perfectly and normally developed child, physically and mentally, judged by scientific rules. This would, of course, necessitate looking forward to results after I had ceased to be a spectator of my own experiments, at least from the earth plane.

But if I used the remainder of my life here in such wise and worthy efforts for the large benefit of humanity I should hope to be on a spiritual plane where I could still act as one of a spiritual advisory board.

After establishing these two worthy institutions, I would endow the humane societies and the societies working for kindness to animals, and send agents all over the country to give stereopticon views and lectures to liverymen and drivers and school children to instruct them how to care for and properly use animals.

Humane Education

I WOULD induce the public schools to introduce humane education as a regular branch of study.

With such an enormous fortune, of course all efforts of such a nature would succeed. I would have the religion of kindness introduced in all my institutions, and men, women and children made to understand the truth of the oneness of all created things and the immortality of all life.

Then I would endow a great institution of American art, and I would send competent agents to scratch all the studios of struggling artists and sculptors and to purchase the best specimens of native productions to be found. I would stimulate genius and reward merit and lift American art to a higher standard than it has yet occupied.

I would give commissions to painters and sculptors, and establish a prize contest for each year in different departments of art.

I can only outline these undertakings for Mr. Rockefeller's consideration.

They would immortalize him and silence forever the references to his "tainted money." And they would revolutionize the world in one hundred years.

Many of these things will be done in the next century. It would be a glorious record for any man to be the first to start them.

The Public Wants to See Mercy Shown to Tucker

Whatever may be the opinion of lawyers, who frequently and naturally base their judgments on technicalities and court interpretations, it is very clear to the popular mind in Massachusetts that Charles L. Tucker ought not to be electrocuted next week for the murder of Mabel Page.

This opinion, which is overwhelmingly prevalent among the laymen who form the great mass of Massachusetts citizens, does not impugn the fairness of the courts which have passed on Tucker's case, nor the honesty and integrity of the officers who prosecuted him. It is based upon the personal belief of citizens, who have read the evidence, studied the case, and pondered upon the responsibility of the State which takes the life of a human being if there is the slightest chance that he is innocent.

Many people in Massachusetts believe Charles L. Tucker to be innocent of the murder.

Many more people believe that Charles L. Tucker, at his trial, was not proved guilty BEYOND A REASONABLE DOUBT.

A still greater number believe that Tucker MAY be guilty, that there was evidence which pointed blackly toward him, but that in certain links of the chain of evidence which the government forged about him there was such weakness that the Commonwealth should not allow a sentence of death to be executed.

These cannot see—and this seems to be the nearly universal expression of opinion throughout the State—how the State is to lose in dignity, in prestige, or in power to prevent crime, if Charles L. Tucker is sent to State prison for life, instead of being put to death.

The great public of Massachusetts will be well satisfied if Governor Guild sees his way clear to the commutation of Tucker's sentence. The respect for law which has always been a characteristic of Massachusetts citizenship will, under the existing circumstances, be STRENGTHENED rather than lessened by such an act.

Welcome, Doctors and Scientists!

By Harry B. Metcalf

(The American Medical Association is in convention in Boston this week. The vanguard of next week's big Christian Scientist convention has also arrived.)

HO, the doctors, great and small, from all the world have come,
Practitioners of high degree, eavants from lands afar;
Of science medical they hold the substance and the sum—
With ills and ails material in unison they'll spar.

HO, the Christian Scientists are coming, too, in hosts;
Imaginary foes of health they've conquered with a think.
Proclaimers of the "mental cure" from many distant coasts
Will tell the Hub how it can put "disease" upon the blink.

HO, 'tis well that "Scientists" and "medics" come abreast.
For each unto the other may perform a friendly trick—
Your allopathic ills may be by "absent treatment" blest;
And doctors plenty are at hand if „Scientists" get sick.

Little Editorials from the People

SHOULD USE ENGLISH

W. R. Hearst, Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Your editorial on doctor's prescriptions was a splendid one. Doctors should be compelled to write their prescriptions in the English language; they should also be compelled to use letters instead of crow's feet, as most of them do.

They scribble the prescriptions in such careless manner, I suppose, because they don't know how to spell Latin properly, and in the majority of cases it is impossible to say if it is right or wrong.
